Bill to Hike Military Pay Faces Threat In Senate

Tydings Declares Unification Action Must Offset Costs Before Acceptance

By The Associated Press

The 302-million-dollar military pay boost may be condemned to death in the Senate unless the House passes an armed forces unification measure.

That was made clear yesterday by Senator Tydings (D., Md.).

Tydings, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said in a radio talk (WBAL Baltimore) that Senators are disposed not to act yet on military pay—that members of his committee want the unification savings to offset the higher costs of raising salaries.

"Without these economies, they are not willing" to add to military spending, he said.

Both bills have been involved in strategy talks between Tydings and Chairman Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee.

Tydings has been pushing for approval of tighter unification of the Army, Navy and Air Forces, expected by some to produce substantial savings in defense costs.

Vinson has been equally insistent upon passage of the bill boosting the pay for the 1,650,000 persons in the armed services. The House sent his bill back to committee once, but he shaved it down and won passage on the second try.

Tydings called his committee for a closed session today to vote on the pay boost, which would range from $2.50 a month for privates first class, who would then draw $82.50, up to a $263 raise for brigadier generals, who would get $975.

Vinson was expected to win House passage a few hours later today of the unification measure in abbreviated form. His committee reversed an earlier decision to sidetrack the Senate bill—then reported out just one of five sections of the measure.

Only part of the Senate unification bill cleared for House action was one reforming the spending and fiscal controls of the defense establishment and its three military departments, Army, Navy and Air Force. This is the feature expected to result in the big savings.

The Senate also had approved a large increase in powers for the Secretary of National Defense over the three separate services. But

Guardsmen Sent To Groveland, Fla., In Racial Disorder

Tavares, Fla., July 17 (U.P.).—Governor Warren tonight ordered 50 National Guardsmen into the nearby town of Groveland where a Ku Klux Klan parade today followed a night of disorder blamed on a mob seeking Negro rapists.

A young wife reported Saturday that she had been snatched from her husband by four Negroes and raped by each at the point of a gun.

Last night a mob threatened to storm the jail and later roamed through the Negro section of Groveland, firing shots and shouting threats.

This afternoon a procession of 20 cars, bearing Orange County license tags, passed through Groveland distributing pamphlets entitled "Ideals of the Ku Klux Klan."

A citizens' committee than asked the Governor for protection.

Two rape suspects were transferred to a secret jail yesterday. The Negro population of 400 had been "evacuated" before the mob entered its section.

2 Gals Done Him Wrong, Taking $1 And His Honor . . .

Los Angeles, July 17 (U.P.).—Handsome Edward Miller, 22, sausage manufacturer, reported today to police that he lost $1 and his honor to two women bandits.

After the two young women kidnaped him, one of them compelled Miller at the point of a gun to have amorous relations with the other, he related.

"She was red-haired. The other was a blonde. They were between 22 and 30," he said.

With his wife and 20 young people from their church, Miller attended a wiener roast in the Palos Verdes area. He went to a parking area to change his clothes and was met by the women bandits who took him to a sheltered spot.

Petrillo Cited By Battle as Aiding Miller

Richmond, Va., July 17 (Spl.).—The name of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians, was tossed into the bitter Virginia State primary campaign tonight as an "outside influence" seeking to sway the election on August 2.

John S. Battle, one of the four candidates for Democratic nomination for Governor, made public a copy of a letter allegedly bearing Petrillo's printed signature. The letter, to members of his union in the State, urged work and votes for Francis Pickens Miller, another Democratic candidate.

Battle has been adopted by the Democratic machine of Senator Byrd as its candidate, and Miller as its chief opponent in the race. Battle forces have repeatedly charged that Miller is backed by outside interests. Miller has denied the charges.

Letter to Musicians

The letter, on printed stationery, was addressed to "Members of the American Federation of Musicians in Virginia."

It said in part:

"Various States have enacted legislation which means absolute ruination to the labor movement, therefore we are compelled to take an interest in all State elections . . .

"It is most important that you lend your support to Francis Pickens Miller, a liberal and progressive antimachine candidate. It is in the interests of yourself, the organization to which you belong, and to all workers of Virginia . . . that every effort be made to elect Francis Pickens Miller."

The letter then asked recipients to make contact with and give support through Jack S. Smith, chairman of "Labor's League for Political Education in Virginia." It then reiterated solicitation of help for Miller.

At the time he made the letter public, Battle telegraphed Miller he was doing so, in answer to Miller's earlier telegraphed request for evidence to bear out

Byrd Urges Nourse Body Be Probed

By The Associated Press

Senator Byrd (D., Va.) yesterday demanded that Congress quiz President Truman's top economic advisers to find out whether their "fanciful ideas" are "made in America."

The Virginian blamed members of the President's Council of Economic Advisers—"this strange group of men"—for Mr. Truman's recent warning against deep cuts in Federal spending.

"These men—who seem to be dictating the Administration's economic program—are not elected officials," Byrd said in a radio interview with Charles Parmer over station WPIK.

"The public knows little of them—their backgrounds and beliefs. Yet they are apparently in positions of great power in Government. Cloistered in the White House, aloof from and not responsible to the electorate, they are spinning economic ideas which vitally affect all of us.

Excused From Testifying

"I think the time has come for Congress to take steps to make the members of the President's Economic Council available for examination by congressional committees—and at this session of Congress."

Byrd said he wanted to learn whether their economic ideas "are marked 'made in America' or is this country being asked to again follow some foreign ideology which has already failed abroad?"

Edwin G. Nourse, chairman of the council, has taken the position in the past that it should confine itself to making reports to the President and should not go before Congress either to champion or oppose legislation.

At his request, the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report heretofore has excused him from testifying. The other council members, Leon H. Keyserling and John D. Clark, have appeared before the committee, however.

In response to questions about Senator Byrd's proposal yesterday, Chairman O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) of the Joint Committee told a reporter he has no doubt subcommittees will wish to consult council members before completing studies they are making in various economic fields.

"I see no reason why members of the council should not testify," O'Mahoney said.

Meantime, Nourse, an economist for the Brookings Institution before he became chairman of the President's economic advisers, sounded a warning to businessmen and consumers against hoarding, going into "the storm cellar" or waiting for "prewar prices."

"Prices are not going to get to that level," he said in an inter-

Pilot Snaps Head, Neck Back, But Lands Plane

Portland, Oreg., July 17 (AP).—A National Guard flier whose neck and head were snapped into a paralyzed backward position in aerial acrobatics today piloted a plane to a perfect landing with radioed directions.

Lieut. John Haley, Portland, brought his F-51 Mustang fighter out of a stall for a three-point landing. He fainted as he stepped to the ground.

National Guard Maj. Gordon Doolittle and Capt. Carl Brose, who were flying in formation with Haley, reported they detected Haley was in trouble after the first maneuver. One quickly drew up behind Haley's plane and radioed instructions to him.

Lieutenant Haley's head was paralyzed in a backward position and he was unable to turn it to see the ground. Later in the day he recovered and participated in an air show.

Speed of New Russian Jets Baffles Foreign Air Attaches

Moscow, July 17 (AP).—The Russian Air Force whipped new jet warplanes through their paces today in a Moscow aviation day show, watched by thousands of Russians and a few foreign air observers.

The planes were described by Soviet officials as "superspeed jet aircraft."

Prime Minister Stalin, looking in good health and spirits, watched the display of aerial might from the clubhouse veranda at Tushino Airfield.

The new "superspeed" planes consisted of three types of single-engined fighters and one two-engined aircraft. A tailless glider which showed great maneuverability in stunting through loops, turns and spirals was greeted by the crowd as a sensation.

[The United Press reported that some of the superjet fighters were so fast that foreign attaches who watched them streak past could not agree on their characteristics.

[Jet planes, completely new types and known ones of improved models, appeared in such number at the annual air show that foreign experts believed they now are in mass production.

[New jets flashed across Tushino Airfield at altitudes under 1000 feet. They had come and gone before the airfield announcer could finish saying they were there.

[The air attaches could not agree on the appearance or character of the new planes because of their great speed. Nor could they agree on the exact number of new types or the imprpvements made on known models.]

United States Ambassador Adm. Alan G. Kirk and diplomatic representatives of other countries watched the show with their military, naval and air attaches.

REAR ADM. L. C. STEVENS

Rear Adm. Leslie C. Stevens, United States Embassy naval and naval air attache, called the air show "very interesting."

"Especially noteworthy," he added, "was the fact it was restricted completely to modern aircraft. There were absolutely no obsolescent types.

Truman Asked To Suspend Gen. Vaughan

By The Associated Press

Representative Shafer (R., Mich.) yesterday demanded that President Truman suspend his military aide, Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan.

Shafer cited the Army's suspension of two other major generals, Herman Feldman, the Quartermaster General, and Alden H. Waitt, Chief of the Chemical Corps, pending a Senate investigation of Army contract handling. He said Vaughan was "implicated in the same case." He gave no details.

Vaughan was not immediately available for comment.

Names of all three generals were mentioned in a recent news story inspiring the inquiry into dealings of "5 per centers" who hire out to obtain Government contracts.

Hunt Denies Charge

The story, in the New York Herald Tribune, pictured James V. Hunt, a former Army officer, as telling a Massachusetts manufacturer that he was a friend of many Washington officials, including the three generals.

Hunt has denied he tried to sell "influence" in contracting to obtain Government business. He said that "none of the people I know in Government service are subject to influence."

Feldman and Waitt were suspended Saturday by Secretary of the Army Gray because of evidence turned up by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Executive Expenditures.

Gray did not disclose details of what was reported about the two generals. He said the Senate group, following published reports, had obtained "certain information concerning persons who claimed they were able to exert influence in procuring Army contracts."

May Open in Two Weeks

He said the indication was that Waitt improperly gave personnel data to someone not entitled to it, and that Feldman gave a contractor's representative procurement information under circumstances appearing irregular. He said a full hearing would be given each officer.

On Capitol Hill, Chairman Hoey (D., N. C.) of the Senate investigating group said the suspended generals would be allowed to appear there if they wish. Hoey said public hearings will be started by the subcommittee in about two weeks. He added "the whole situa-

Martin Asks Spending Cut In Arms Vote

By the United Press

Senator Martin (R., Pa.) said yesterday the $1,130,000,000 plan to help rearm Atlantic Pact nations is "just a start," and that he will oppose it unless President Truman adopts a "definite policy" to cut Federal spending.

Senator Tydings (D., Md.), taking issue with Martin, said that in the long run the arms program will save the taxpayers money by permitting cuts in home front defense spending.

Taylor Opposes Pact

Senator Taylor (D., Idaho) told a reporter he would oppose the security pact. The former Progressive Party vice presidential candidate said he would make a speech against it, because he believes the pact violates the principles of the United Nations.

The Senate resumes debate on the pact today. A final vote is scheduled Thursday or Friday, and both friends and foes of the treaty predict its ratification with only a dozen dissents. But the related arms program continues to draw fire, mainly on grounds stated by Martin, who generally has backed Administration foreign policy.

While supporting the pact, Martin said the arms plan would cost "more and more billions" over the years, a fact that is giving him "the greatest concern and worry."

Hits "Socialistic Programs"

He said the Nation faces a basic decision on whether it will continue to spend billions in Europe "to support socialistic programs that are proving day by day to be complete failures." And he maintained that it might be better to "gamble" that the pact alone, with its warning to aggressors, would suffice to avert another war.

"Unless Mr. Truman adopts a definite policy to economize and cut the cost of Government, I don't know how I can conscientiously support the program to rearm the North Atlantic countries," Martin said.

Friends Urge U. N. Seal on Atom Bombs

Philadelphia, July 17 (NYHT).—American Quakers today proposed that the United States offer to put atomic weapons "under United Nations seal" and to halt the manufacture of fissionable materials.

The United States is the only country now known to have atomic weapons.

The Quaker proposal, stressing that "adequate control of armaments is an essential condition of peace," came in a report on American-Russian relations submitted to the executive board of the American Friends Service Committee by a working party of 16, set up last February.

"War between the United States and the Soviet Union is not inevitable," the report said. It urged definite American action to improve relations between the two great powers: Promotion of East-West trade, creation of a united and neutralized Germany, and strengthening of the U. N.

Given to State Department

The "tentative" report, submitted to both the State Department and the Soviet Embassy, and released for public discussion and criticism, is one part of a three-front Quaker effort. Other phases, it was learned, are:

1. Offer of concrete good-will gifts to the Russians. A $25,000 gift of streptomycin—5000 five-gram vials—was sent to the Russian Red Cross by the committee last August. The group has plans similarly to use its $20,000 share of the 1947 Nobel Peace Prize it divided with the British Society of Friends.

2. Encouragement of cultural relations. Quaker leaders had two conversations with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko before he left here last July. Talks continued with the embassy staff, including Sergei Striganow, in charge of cultural relations, and Deputy Foreign Minister Yakov A. Malik, Gromyko's U. N. successor, through last spring. The new report emphasized "constructive personal contacts."

Gilbert F. White, president of Haverford College, headed the working party.

While expressing awareness of desirable changes in Soviet policy, the suggestions dealt with American policy on the grounds that (1) this was the responsibility of American citizens; (2) the proposals would increase likelihood of Soviet changes; and (3) the importance of preventing war makes it "a good investment for the United States to make more than a rea-

Freedom Award Goes to Gen. Clay And Lilienthal

New York, July 17 (AP).—David E. Lilienthal, head of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, and Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former United States military governor of Germany, have been named winners of the 1949 Freedom Award.

This was announced today by former War Secretary Robert P. Patterson, president of Freedom House, which presents the annual award for "outstanding service to the cause of freedom." Freedom House is an organization devoted to world freedom.

"For 1949," Patterson said, 'we are making a break in our precedent by giving two awards instead of one as in previous years. This dual selection is prompted by our belief that both men have in equal measure dedicated themselves to public service and the ideal of freedom."

Atom Official Missing 4 Days At Los Alamos

Santa Fe, N. M., July 17 (AP).—H. Tracy Snelling, Los Alamos atomic energy public relations director, has been missing four days.

Late last night Atomic Energy Commission officials disclosed his disappearance Wednesday. Tonight there was nothing new in the search for the 37-year-old information chief.

Carroll L. Tyler, an official at Los Alamos, said "The AEC administration would like very much to know where he is."

Snelling was seen last Wednesday afternoon when he called at a Santa Fe newspaper office and later visited La Fonda Hotel here.

Elmo Morgan, assistant manager at Los Alamos, said Snelling had asked Wednesday morning to be permitted to take his annual leave. He had planned to attend a picnic with Mrs. Snelling that afternoon.

On Friday, Mrs. Snelling notified AEC officials of her husband's disappearance after receiving a note from him mailed Thursday noon in Albuquerque. Contents of the letter were not disclosed. They were believed to be of a personal nature, however.

Mrs. Snelling could give no reason for his failure to return.

Third Bus System Will Not Strike, O'Dwyer Declares

New York, July 17 (AP).—Mayor William O'Dwyer tonight said a bus lines strike—already tying up 30 lines—will not spread to the city's giant Third Avenue transit system.

The mayor said Michael J. Quill, president of the CIO Tranport Workers Union, had pledged to recommend no strike to his members.

Earlier Quill said he was going to ask the union executive committee to vote a strike against the Third Avenue system.

This system, the biggest private one in the city, has 76 routes fanning out through Manhattan, the Bronx and Westchester County. It serves 1,800,000 New Yorkers.

The strike began last Thursday over the dismissal of four union mechanics.

O'Dwyer cut short a visit in Mexico City to fly back here today to intervene personally in the dispute. It was the seventh time a municipal crisis had interrupted O'Dwyer's vacations since he became Mayor in 1946.

Government Is Accused Of Fraud in Resolution

Allegiance Pledge Read in Churches As Tension in Capital Mounts

Prague, July 17 (AP).—Czechoslovakia's Roman Catholic priests today defied the Communist government's orders to break off relations with Archbishop Josef Beran and the Vatican.

In the face of these orders, the priests in a formal resolution stated their loyalty to the church hierarchy and their willingness to "bear with them, whatever consequences they may face."

Priests who read the resolution in Catholic churches said it represents the views of a big majority of the Catholic clergy.

They pledged their allegiance to their bishops and other priests and accused the government of violating constitutional guarantees of religious freedom.

Tension Mounts

The declaration was made as tension mounted over the government's campaign to control the church. On Friday Justice Minister Alexei Cepicka called Archbishop Beran a traitor. Cepicka disclosed a law was being drafted to require government approval of all appointments to church posts and to take over church property.

In some Prague churches, the priests followed their sermons by leading their congregations in special prayer "for our Archbishop Beran and our Pope Pius in their difficult times."

Cepicka, Catholic-born son-in-law of President Klement Gottwald, had denounced the Vatican as "the greatest enemy of our state." He said priests who carry out the Vatican decree excommunicating all Catholics supporting communism would be tried for treason.

(The Vatican says talk of "enforcing" excommunication is "laughable nonsense," since it is enforced by the consciences of the guilty.)

'Shall Remain Faithful'

The priests' resolution condemned the government-sponsored Catholic Action movement as "schismatic" and asserted that clerics' signatures endorsing it had been obtained through intimidation or fraud. They warned the faithful to beware of Catholic Action.

"In order to prevent whatever misunderstanding might occur through misuse of our names," the resolution said, "we Catholic priests, especially from St. Vitus District, everyone for himself, declare we are and shall remain faithful to our, in Christ, graceful

Condon Will Give Senators View on Probe Procedure

By the United Press

Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the National Bureau of Standards, will go before a Senate committee this week to tell how it feels to be attacked without warning by a congressional investigating group.

The Senate Rules Committee has invited the famous scientist to testify Tuesday in connection with a resolution aimed at setting up stricter rules of procedure for congressional inquiries. Committee sources said Condon had agreed to discuss "procedural aspects" of his brush with the House Committee on Un-American Activities last year.

The committee attacked Condon as "one of the weakest links in our atomic security." It said he had "knowingly or unknowingly" associated with alleged Communists.

Condon vigorously denied any breach of atomic security, and demanded a public hearing. The committee never held hearings, however, and Condon later was given a clean bill by Government loyalty boards.

Derwent, Actor's Equity Head, Quizzed by Immigration Men

New York, July 17 (AP).—Clarence Derwent, 65-year-old British-born president of Actor's Equity, was grilled for six hours today by United States immigration officials.

The noted actor and producer said he was questioned about possible Communist affiliations.

He told his interrogators, he said, "I am not, never have been and have no Communist affiliations whatsoever."

Derwent was detained on his return from a European tour sponsored by the United States State Department.

Immigration officials in New York offered no explanation of Derwent's detention, but a Justice Department spokesman in Washington said it was a "routine detention."

Derwent said his record had been "examined year after year" and that "possibly someone thinks I am a Communist. That is the only thing I can imagine."

The Justice Department spokesman said Derwent was detained because immigration officials "had reasons to detain him" and that he had been paroled in the custody of his attorney.

The spokesman did not amplify his remarks on the reasons for Derwent's detention, which he described as a "normal situation." He said there may be a hearing later in the case by immigration officials.

Derwent, whose theatrical career goes back to 1902, commented to newsmen after his release:

"The whole thing is so mysterious. I really don't know what

Urges Own School-Aid Measure

Fogarty Declares Barden Bill Biased as 'Jim Crow' Trolley

Representative John E. Fogarty (D., R. I.) last night said the Barden Federal aid-to-education bill is as discriminatory as "Jim Crow streetcars" and "gentile-only beaches."

Fogarty voiced his criticism of the bill sponsored by Representative Graham A. Barden (D., N. C.) in a radio interview on Ed Hart's "Is Congress Doing Its Job?" program on WWDC. Barden appeared on the same program a week ago.

Fogarty said his own education bill, HR 1570, is fairer and more inclusive than the Barden bill, which has been attacked by high Catholic officials as "un-American, anti-Catholic legislation."

"The Barden bill provides Federal funds for the public school system exclusively," Fogarty said. "My bill helps the States to improve their public school systems, extends aid to public school children and helps in a moderate way non-public school pupils."

Fogarty said that many children attend religious schools and should be counted when it comes to deciding how much Federal money would go to each State under the proposed legislation.

"The discrimination sets in when we forbid the States to use any of this money even to furnish services for these boys and girls," he said.

Under Fogarty's bill, each State would have the choice of using Federal funds to furnish textbooks, bus rides and health aids "for either public school children exclusively or for all the children.

West to Ask Reds Blockade Intentions

Berlin, July 17 (NYHT).—The West at four-power talks Monday on an economic modus vivendi for East and West Germany will in effect challenge the Soviet Union on whether it intends to live up to its blockade-lifting pledges.

Western trade experts will present a list of complaints about Soviet restrictions of access to Berlin considered by the West outright violations of both the New York and Paris agreements for lifting the blockade.

Unless these restrictions are removed, the West will take the position the Soviets are bogging down, at least in part, on their pledges.

The most serious complaint is the Soviet shutdown last weekend of at least nine border-crossing points, previously available to Berlin-bound German trucks.

These crossing points were used freely by German trucks before the blockade. Therefore, in accordance with the New York and Paris agreements for restoring the preblockade status quo, the Soviets are bound, in the Western view, to reopen them.

At the moment though Berlin-bound German trucks can enter the Soviet zone only at the Helmstedt check point.

Monday's four-power talks will be the first step toward implementing the Paris Foreign Ministers' agreement for expansion of trade and economic relations between the split halves of this nation.

Godless Rule To Fail, Pope Tells Berlin

Berlin, July 17 (AP).—Pope Pius XII told German Catholics today that all government which shuns faith in God is doomed to decay.

The Holy Father's special message to 650,000 Catholics of the Berlin diocese and the Russian zone avoided any reference to communism. But it was liberally sprinkled with hints that anti-church regimes are not passing events with permanence.

The message was broadcast by Vatican radio for a golden jubilee celebration by the Berlin diocese of the Pope's ordination to the priesthood.

As Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, the present Pope served as papal nuncio to Berlin for years and was widely acquainted with church circles.

Speaking in fluent German, the Pope recalled in his message the prosperity and peace he once knew in Berlin.

"In the meantime," he said, "your city has had to submit to fates of apocalyptic awfulness, shuddering horrors of war and destruction."

He urged German Catholics to view the ruins of war as a lesson.

"Isn't it like a horrifying sign not to become absorbed in the values of this world?" he declared.

"There is only one lasting thing: God, and complete devotion to God."

The pontiff added, however, that German catholicism had withstood the Third Reich's disintegration of all order and revaluation of all morals and he said the same faith in God would carry the Germans through whatever lies ahead.

"Communities and states may seem to be fastened to the fundaments of the world," the Pope said. "If they are not based on faith in God they are doomed to decay."

The Pope extended the apostolic blessing to the entire diocese, which embraces the four-power city of Berlin and parts of Soviet-occupied Brandenburg and Pomerania.

Konrad Cardinal von Preysing, Archbishop of Berlin, declared a special "Catholic Day" and officiated at a religous rally for the Pope's jubilee.

Reds Attack Berlin Bishop Of Lutherans

Berlin, July 17 (AP).—The leading Communist newspaper in Eastern Germany denounced Lutheran Bishop Otto Diebelius of Berlin today. It called him a warmonger and an instrument of American aggression.

Apparently presaging a bitter struggle in the Soviet zone between Communist and church officials, a full page in Neues Deutschland, central organ of the Socialist Unity (Communist) Party, was devoted to an attack on the bishop.

In a Whitsunday pastoral letter, Dr. Dibelius claimed last month that the East German Communists were marching down the same political path as the Nazis did under Hitler.

An editor of the Communist organ countered today with a demand that the Berlin bishop turn his criticism on the United States and Western Germany.

The editor, Wilheim Girnus, claimed the Soviet zone was a land of peace and justice, while Nazism still survived in Allied zones and German resources there were exploited by foreign capitalists.

"If he does not acknowledge these facts, then one can only draw the conclusion that he is silent on purpose. Thereby he has become an instrument of American aggression and, through his decision, aligned himself with American imperialism against the German nation," the editor declared.

The denunciation of Dr. Sibelius was printed alongside a letter from Dr. Heinrich Grueber, Lutheran dean, in which he protested against the Communist editor's earlier attempt "to construct an antagonism between the bishop and the Soviet occupation power."

The bishop is chairman of the German Protestant Council of Churches and has close ties with many churchmen of Western countries.

archpastor and Monsignor Beran, Archbishop and Primate of Bohemia."

The priests said that, like their bishops, they approve a "real agreement" between state and church in Czechoslovakia, but that such an agreement on the terms of the Communist government is impossible. They added:

"We are certain all conscientious and faithful Catholics agree with us and they would so testify if they were given the opportunity of free speech."

The priests said they were speaking from their own consciences and "our responsibility before our nation."

Churchmen said the priests' resolution was read in most Prague Catholics churches, including St. Vitus, Archbishop Beran's cathedral. Cathedral officials said the proclamation was read there at the 6 a. m. mass, although scheduled services later in the day were canceled without explanation and churchgoers turned away.

Catholics who went there for services were told by police that they could attend mass at nearby St. Jiri (George) Church.

But at St. Jiri Church they were told there would be no service there. No explanation was available for the omission of mass.

Togliatti Defies Decree of Vatican

Rome, July 17 (AP).—Italy's Communist leader, Palmiro Togliatti, today publicly defied the Vatican's decree excommunicating those who support communism.

Disputing the church edict, Catholic-born Togliatti told cheering party followers they could be militant Communists and good Catholics at the same time.

The Moscow-trained leader of Italy's two million Communists accused the Vatican of fighting Red ideology with power dragged "from the darkest ages of history."

Excommunication will never destroy Communism, he told a destroy communism,h e told a in a Rome theater.

Shouts of "We don't care, we don't care," greeted Togliatti's reference to the Pope's excommunication decree.

One Death Reported In Kyushu Typhoon

Tokyo, July 17 (AP).—A typhoon caused one death and destroyed 79 houses in the area of Kagoshima, southern Kyushu Island, national rural police headquarters said today.

The U. S. Air Force weather wing reported the typhoon had blown itself down to tropical storm size. Winds decreased to 50 knots. Heavy rains continued in Kyushu and Shikoku Islands.

20 Millions Homeless in China Floods

Shanghai, July 17 (AP).—Rice prices rose more than 30 per cent to 60,000 Communist dollars (about $30 United States) for a 165-pound bag today as the price and food situation in this Red-ruled city neared a crisis.

(The Nationalist Central News Agency quoted Home Minister Gen. Li Han-huen as saying 20 million Chinese were homeless as result of the floods.

(In Hunan Province—China's great rice-producing center—he said, 57,000 had drowned and five million were homeless with five million acres of rice fields destroyed in the worst flood in 50 years.

(Li said Hunan has had only nine days without rain in the past six months and that the rice crop was 60 per cent destroyed.)

At the same time the official exchange rate increased from 1850 to 1950 for one United States dollar.

This official rate remained far behind the price of rice, to which wages are pegged. When the Communist dollar was 1600 to $1 a month ago, rice was selling for 11,000 Communist dollars a bag. Now rice is up nearly 50,000 dollars while the official exchange rate has risen only 350 points.

The causes are numerous, including the nationalist blockade, disrupted communications, floods and crop losses.

In the past, such price jumps were partly combated by dumping United States Economic Cooperation Administration rice at fixed prices, but now there is no ECA rice.

And since employers say they cannot possibly raise payrolls to meet the rice price jumps, efforts are being made to shift wages from a rice basis to some other index systems.

Chinese Reds End Lull, Open Drive on Changsha

Canton, China, July 17 (AP).—The nationalist military news agency reported tonight that strong Communist forces had started a drive apparently aimed toward Changsha, central China stronghold 400 miles north of Canton.

(This might signal the end of the lull on the central China civil war front for about two months.)

The official Central News Agency said 500 troops of the one-eyed Communist Gen. Liu Po-cheng had taken Anfu, 130 miles southeast of Changsha, and were driving on northwest.

The military news agency said their next objective was Pingsiang, a coal-mining town only 70 miles southeast of Changsha.

Simultaneously, pro-government dispatches reported four Red divisions (possibly 30,000 men) had stormed and taken Ichang, Yangtze River port 200 miles west of Hankow.

Plea Expected By MacArthur For More Men

Tokyo, July 17 (U.P.).—An informant predicted today that Gen. Douglas MacArthur would appeal to Gen. Omar Bradley to send more men and more money to Japan when the United States Army's Chief of Staff visits Tokyo in September, on a tour of Far East United States installations.

MacArthur repeatedly has requested additional forces and funds through official channels, but he has not been in the United States since before Pearl Harbor. Bradley's visit will give MacArthur his first opportunity for a face-to-face appeal to the Army's chief.

It was reported that MacArthur believes that America's military defense lines in the Far East must be kept strong, and that enough money must be furnished to support United States policy in this part of the world.

"The general still has a feeling that this theater is getting the crumbs, just as it did in World War II" (when victory in Europe had priority over the Pacific war) the informant said.

Officers at MacArthur's headquarters are known to believe that the already-impressive Japanese economic recovery program could be made "tremendous" if they were given as much money as has been furnished occupation authorities in Germany.

According to Washington reports, the Chief of Staff will ask MacArthur about the possibility of checking the rising Communist tide in the Far East, and about the best strategic locations for American bases.

Chennault Sees Red Menace in Consul's Beating

By the United Press

Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault said yesterday the "brutal beating" suffered by William M. Olive, American vice consul at Shanghai, shows the Chinese Communists "are not just talking."

In a radio interview from Washington over Louisiana stations KNOE, Monroe, and WNOE, New Orleans, the former head of China's "Flying Tigers" repeated his assertion that a Communist sweep in China would mean Red domination of all Asia.

"And that would be the greatest disaster in our national history and the greatest threat to our security that we Americans, and our allies, have faced," he said. He was interviewed by Representative F. Edward Hebert (D., La.).

Chennault reiterated his conviction that the United States, by aiding Nationalist China now "at relatively little cost, can stop the Communists before they overwhelm all Asia."

Berlin Airlift May Be Cut By U. S. and Britain

Berlin, July 17 (U.P.).—Reliable British informants said today that British and American authorities were considering reduction of the airlift service of supply to Berlin to a skeleton force in the belief that the Russian blockade of the city is really at an end.

British authorities already have sent to London, for cabinet consideration, a proposal to reduce the British part of the air lift to 33 per cent of its present size, informants said. They expressed belief that the cabinet would take up the proposal Monday.

Usually well informed British officials said that American authorities were considering a similar plan. American officials refused to discuss the report.

acrobatic flying was magnificent. Such performance comes only after great practice."

Admiral Stevens has seen two previous air shows in Moscow.

Lieut. Col. Tan Hsien-yung, Chinese Embassy air attache who has observed one previous Soviet air show, said: "The most interesting thing for me was the new superjets. They seemed extraordinarily fast."

One outstanding feature of the show was the large number of Tupolev bombers. Yakovlev, Mikoyan and Lavochkin jet fighters stunted over the field singly and in tight formations of three, five and nine planes.

Stalin's Son Has Role

Marshal Konstantin Vershinin, commander in chief of the Soviet air forces, stood beside Stalin on the veranda of the Chkalov Air Club during the two-hour show. Other Soviet leaders stood near by.

The Prime Minister's son, Lieut. Gen. of Aviation Vassili Stalin commanded the military section of the aerial parade.

(A Moscow radio broadcast heard in London said the show was opened by 27 planes towing huge portraits of Stalin. A skywriting plane spread the slogan "Glory to Stalin" in smoke.)

The lead editorial of Pravda, official Communist Party organ, said this morning the Soviet Union had attained "serious successes in the development of motor and jet aviation techniques."

In an accompanying article, Marshal Vershinin wrote that "the airfleet of the U. S. S. R. is receiving in abundance more and more perfected civil and military planes for all types of aviation—one-motor, multimotor, reciprocating and jet."

Vershinin also concluded the Soviet Union won the air war for the Allies in World War II. He asserted the Soviet Air Forces destroyed 75,000 of 80,000 aircraft the Germans produced in the last years of the war.

He declared American and British aviation leaders had exaggerated the importance of air power since the end of the war "out of all proportions." This was done, he said, because of the knowledge the United States and Britain do not have "reliable reserves of manpower" for infantry and other services.

Vershinin continued that Anglo-American warmongers assume wrongly that the Russians and their Eastern European allies "will be intimidated by the so-called 'atomic' or 'pushbutton' warfare."

"These ideas emanate from the completely distorted view that the outcome of war can be settled by one kind of weapon alone. History has proved the opposite more than once," the Russian said.

London Strike Will Continue, Leaders Say

London, July 17 (AP).—Leaders of London's striking dock workers told a mass meeting today they would continue the walkout that has tied up 91 ships for nearly three weeks.

Rain interrupted the demonstration attended by some 2000 of the 14,000 dockers involved in the strike, which government leaders have called Communist-inspired.

Strike leaders said they were determined not to unload the two Canadian ships on which the walkout is centered. They boycotted the ships in sympathy with a Canadian seaman's union labor dispute and were then barred by the dock governing board from working on other ships until they unloaded the two Canadian ships.

Some 7000 troops who have been unloading the idle ships under a proclamation of national emergency had the day off. They were scheduled to resume dock duty Monday.

In Marseille, France, sailors and stevedores, most of whom are affiliated with the Communist-led GeneralFederation of Labor (CGT), decided not to unload any more Canadian ships while the Canadian seamens' strike is on.

Australian Strikers Told to Quit Red Line

Canberra, July 17 (AP).—Prime Minister J. B. Chiefly called on Australia's 24,000 striking coal miners tonight to abandon the Communist "law of the jungle."

"Either you forsake the law of the jungle, which is the Communist creed, and return to lawful arbitration authority, or you ally yourselves with this worldwide movement" which is trying to wreck the democratic way of life, Chiefly said in a nation-wide broadcast.

The miners struck three weeks ago, rejecting established arbitration machinery to settle wage and hour demands. Their leaders are admitted Communists.

sonable effort to improve the situation.

The three recommendations were:

1. Economic policy: The report said rigid American export controls have increased "the psychological war potential in the U. S. S. R. and eastern Europe." It recommended that the United States drop its present restrictions on normal exports to eastern Europe, encourage collaboration between the European Marshall plan organization and the U. N. Economic Commission for Europe, and reexamine its remaining tariff barriers. It urged that U. N. aid to underprivileged countries include eastern Europe.

2. Germany: The report said partition of Germany was now causing a lag in Soviet zone recovery, which had "brought an intensification of authoritarian methods of rule." Urging "the political and economy unification and the neutralization of Germany," the group said such efforts might now bring results that would be unlikely after several more years of partition-fanned German nationalism and related the German state and Ruhr more closely to the western power bloc.

It was urged that the Germans themselves, under four-power supervision, prepare a constitution and government for all Germany. Thereafter, all occupation forces would be progressively withdrawn, with American military forces leaving Europe. All countries should be assured access to German industrial output and Germany should be brought into an international arms control.

3. United Nations: The report urged the United States to promote actively U. N. mediation, conciliation and peaceful settlement of disputes; to seek out issues on which it could justly "vote with the Soviet Union;" to restrain propaganda use of U. N., and to use caution before proposing "sharply divisive" measures.

The Quakers proposed the United States seek direct U. N. trusteeships over strategic areas, support U. N. administration of former Italian colonies, and explore possible U. N. rule for such regions as the Dardanelles.

In the arms field, they urged the United States to make a new Assembly effort to control and reduce armaments, and to agree to consider simultaneous conventions to regulate conventional armaments and atomic weapons. Suggesting the sealing of present atomic weapons and halting further uncontrolled production of fissionable materials, the report said:

"In view of the enormous economic incentive for armaments control and reduction, the problem is one which even a short step in the right direction can have great consequences."

GI Reds Held Modifies Torture Tale

Berlin, July 17 (AP).—An American Army hospital director today said Recruit Christus Rangaves showed no trace of malnutrition to support his claim he was starved during five months in Soviet imprisonment.

Col. F. T. Chamberlin said Rangaves, released by the Russians two nights ago, was lice-infested when he entered the hospital for a detailed medical examination.

"But he seems in good shape," the colonel added. "Not a trace of malnutrition or physical punishment."

The 21-year-old recruit, of New York City, faces court martial for having been AWOL fo ra month before he was jailed in East Berlin last February.

Walking into the colonel's hospital office today for a physical checkup, Rangaves, who is 5 feet 2-inches tall, modified the harrowing story of torture and starvation he first told American military police.

He said the jail "ice box," in which he said he was made to stand nude in front of a fan, was a cold room without any ice. He was able today to recollect he was given a blanket by a guard.

He said the "hot box," in which he also was confined from time to time, was a small chamber without unusual heating.

He insisted he saw Soviet guards rape German women prisoners in an adjoining cell. He said some of the women had been arrested for prostitution, and the Russians had offered to let him visit one, but he refused.

He said today he remembered one Soviet corporal had given him cigarettes and allowed him to exercise outside his cell.

Nazis Regain Jobs, U. S. Finds

Frankfurt, July 17 (U.P.).—Resurgent Nazis have gained a substantial foothold in the ranks of top civil servants working for German state governments, a United Press survey of the United States zone of Germany showed today.

Figures compiled by both the American military government and Germans show that the number of former Nazis in state ministries such as food, finance, justice and education range from relatively low percentages to as high as between 80 and 90 per cent.

The situation is considered so serious that John J. McCloy, military governor and future United States High Commissioner for Germany, has already announced he will conduct a complete investigation of the return of Nazis to power.

These former Nazis may have been found guilty of only minor offenses by de-Nazification courts, military government officials point out, but they were Nazis just the same.

"They seem to be concentrating on the higher positions in the civil service where they handle policies permanently, even though elected officials change," an American military government spokesman said.

In two United States zone states —Bavaria and Hesse—former Nazi officials are conducting silent purges of non-Nazi workers, according to documented protests to governmental officials by Civil Servants Employe Associations.

In a third—Wurtemberg-Baden —a minor "Iron Curtain" has been rung down by state ministry officials whoare beginning to refuse to give information on the political backgrounds of their employes.

In the fourth—the port state of Bremen—a de-Nazification adviser charged recently that between 80 and 90 per cent of all higher public officers were held by people who had faced de-Nazification courts.

3 Flying Fortresses Take Part In Israeli Display of Might

Tel Aviv, July 17 (NYHT).—The Israeli army allowed some of its long-cherished secret weapons to go on public display today as part of the annual Army Day review and parade which was witnessed by 200,000 cheering civilians.

Above the parade ground, 5000 troops and vehicles were massed, three American Flying Fortresses made repeated low altitude passes so that the Zionist Star emblazoned on their fuselage could be easily seen. For the first time, the powerful bombers, which played a decisive role in Israel's military campaign, cast off their secret role.

Off the Tel Aviv coast, a destroyer steamed at the head of a naval convoy which included several corvettes.

On the parade ground, French 105-millimeter mortars, a Swedish rapid-fire aircraft gun, and military equipment from a score of other nations passed the reviewing stand where the diplomatic corps, foreign military observers and Israeli officials were gathered.

While the troops were massed before the parade stand, Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion gave warning that their battle prowess might again be tested.

"We cannot close our eyes," he declared "to those in Arab states who are again calling for a war of vengeance."

Israel, Arab States Resume Peace Talks

Lausanne, Switzerland, July 17 (U.P.).—Israel and four Arab states resume peace talks here tomorrow after a three weeks' recess, although some of the chief delegates will not arrive for several days.

The talks were recessed June 29 to allow delegates to consult their governments in an effort to break a deadlock which arose over Israeli refusal to accept any refugees until the Arabs agreed to a settlement.

Since the recess Israel has offered to reunite "broken families" among the refugees. The Arabs said earlier that this offer should serve at least "as a basis for further discussion." Nations involved are Egypt, Syria, Lebanon and Jordan.

President Truman meanwhile named Paul Porter, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, as successor to Mark Ethridge who resigned last month as United States representative on the three-nation Palestine Conciliation Commission.

Stuart Rockwell, chief of the State Department's Palestine desk, arrived today to take part in the talks.

18 Native Girls Killed in Cave-in In Mozambique

Lourenco Marques, Mozambique, July 17 (AP).—An old well collapsed during a gay wedding party yesterday and at least 18 native girls perished. Several others are missing.

Girls of the Catholic mission Michel Archangel, in the territories of Native Chieftain Chibutotoine, were dancing around the mission's old well in celebration of the scheduled wedding today of one of their number. Suddenly the well caved in and buried many of the girls, who were between 16 and 20 years of age.

Fathers and nuns at the mission said many natives were angry, attributing the accident to witchcraft by enemies of the bridegroom.

Mozambique is a Portuguese colony on the southeast coast of Africa.

By The Associated Press

Senator McCarran (D., Nev.) yesterday said he intends to inform the public about the activities in this country of 100 or more aliens he suspects of having a background of spy work abroad.

"We are going to show just what they have been doing since they got in here," McCarran declared.

He heads a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee checking on subversive aliens, especially those admitted to the United States as representatives of foreign governments and as delegates to international organizations like the United Nations.

Won't Name Names

This country's Central Intelligence Agency told the subcommittee Saturday that 32 of 100 such aliens had engaged in subversive activity, including active Communist organizational work, before coming to this country.

The agency said also that 29 persons in the same group are high-ranking Communist Party officials and 21 of the individuals "have reportedly or allegedly been engaged in active Communist organizational work of an underground or subversive nature outside their homelands."

McCarran said the subcommittee won't name any names at public hearings to be resumed soon, but that those involved "will be sufficiently identified so that there won't be any doubt about what's going on."

The chairman complained that neither the Justice Department nor the State Department has been as frank as he would like them to be in supplying the committee with confidential information about subversive aliens.

Questions U. S. Policy

"They claim its all in the best interests of the country," McCarran said. " But I am wondering whether it is.

"Is it better to let persons into this country who avowedly are here to harm us, or is it better to displease a foreign government by disclosing their activities?

"We already have displeased the foreign governments concerned, so why should we jeopardize the security of our own country by letting these aliens in?"

The Senator added that, "If we don't insist on protecting this Government of ours soon, we'll wake up and find we don't have a Government to protect."

is behind this whole thing. I can thing of no reason for this. I am completely in the dark."

Derwent, who has lived in the United States for about 25 years but still is a British subject, was returning in an Air Force plane with a troupe of actors from a "Hamlet" festival in Denmark, and a tour of Germany.

After Derwent had been detained for some hours, immigration officials said they thought he would be taken to Ellis Island for further examination.

An Army staff car appeared at the field with two officers and a sergeant. One officer said they had been sent to escort "someone to Ellis Island."

But Derwent suddenly left the immigration offices and told reporters he had been released.

Later an Air Force colonel, who declined to give his name, said he had telephoned to Washington after Derwent was detained, and then "things began to happen."

Derwent, looking tired after the questioning, told reporters:

"I was instructed not to say anything."

Later, the actor told newsmen he had been asked whether he was a Communist, or belonged to any Communist organizations.

"I thought that when a reentry permit was issued, all investigation had been made and everything was in order."

Current Biography says that "although Derwent took out his first papers for American citizenship, he did not become naturalized, since it would be necessary for an American actor to apply for a labor permit to appear in productions in Britain."

The Hamlet troupe had left the Elsinre Festival to tour Germany, playing for American soldiers.

All the other actors, including Walter Abel, screen and stage star, were cleared quickly by immigration agents.

"I don't understand it," Abel said of Derwent's detention. "If there is anyone who fought the Leftists in Actors Equity, it is Clarence Derwent."

Fogarty Hits Barden Bill

If a State chooses to spend its Federal funds for public school children exclusively, a portion of its allotment would be withheld by the Federal Government." The District is included in the Fogarty version.

Fogarty said that following Barden's "line of reasoning to its logical conclusion, we would have to eliminate any type of service which might give rise to controversy or discrimination. So the way to solve the discrimnation problem in Washihgton's playgrounds is to close all the playgrounds. In principle, I am opposed to Jim Crow streetcars, Gentile-only beaches, and public-school-only buses."

Barden, the week before, had said that criticism of his bill comes "from those sources who would whip their flock into a fanaticism that could destroy the first principle of American democracy—the separation of church and state."

Fogarty said "what touched off the explosive religious controversy which is disturbing Mr. Barden was his own bill with its rigid prohibitions against any kind of Federal help for nonpublic school children."

Tight-Rope Walker, Daughter Fall to Death

Joseph Eisenmann, 38, and his daughter, Maria, had been performing a hair-raising routine on a wire strung high over the Danube for the past three weeks.

tion" regarding "5 per centers" will be aired.

Shafer, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said in a statement that Vaughan has "openly boasted" he knows at least 300 "5 per centers." This apparently alluded to a remark of Vaughan's to reporters when he returned July 6 from a vacation trip.

The general said at that time he knew "about 300 persons in Washington" who engaged in contract operations. His comment came when reporters sought to ask him about his acquaintance with Hunt.

This prompted Representative Keating (R., N. Y.) to tell the House that Vaughan should be required to testify before a congressional committee. He said Vaughan had cast a stain "upon every procurement agency" here

"General Vaughan presently enjoys a White House immunity not granted Generals Waitt and Feldman, yet since this scandal was first brought into the open by the New York Herald Tribune on June 21, the conduct of General Vaughan has been, to put it mildly as possible, in the poorest taste.

"It is to be recalled that when he returned from a Guatemala cruise nearly three weeks after the scandal broke, he was interviewed as to his part in the case for the first time.

"He bulldozed the newsmen, drew back his arm as if to strike one of them, employed language which most radio stations would not put on the air, and finally reminded the reporters that they had better watch out because they 'might want favors at the White House some day.' "

Both Feldman and Waitt previously denied that "influence" figured in any Army contract deals.

Neither has commented on the suspension action. Gray said he took action because evidence indicated each had shown a lack of judgement and propriety expected of persons in their positions.

$20 Debt Starts Fight Ending in Death of 2

Chicago, July 17 (U.P.).—Two men died today because of a $20 debt, police reported.

High Jurists At Hiss Trial Are Hit Again

By The Associated Press

Representative Smith (R., Wis.), a lawyer, yesterday said Justices Frankfurter and Reed set a "degrading precedent" by testifying as character witnesses in the perjury trial of Alger Hiss.

Smith joined a chorus of Republican criticism of the voluntary action of the two high justices. The Wisconsin legislator said it was not only beneath the dignity of the Supreme Court, but "the practice is reprehensible."

"And Justice Frankfurter's testimony didn't increase his stature with the legal profession or the general public," the statement added.

Smith gave his opinion in making public a letter to Chairman Cellar (D., N. Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee asking an early hearing on Smith's bill to protect Federal judges from subpena as character witnesses.

Studied Under Frankfurter

"In view of the mail I have already received I feel certain I can secure the attendance of prominent attorneys in and out of Washington who will support my bill," the Congressman said.

Saturday Representative Keating (R., N. Y.), who studied law under Frankfurter at Harvard, said he would introduce a bill to forbid United States justices from being character witnesses. Representative Velde (R., Ill.) said he would support it.

Both said the two justices had shocked the Nation by an example of impropriety. They said it conceivably could lead to paralysis of the judicial system if enough justices disqualified themselves by such appearances in cases which might come before them on appeal.

Frankfurter and Reed appeared for Hiss in New York where he was tried on charges of lying by denying he gave secret Government documents to Whittaker Chambers, an avowed former Communist. Hiss formerly was a State Department official. The jury failed to agree after voting 8 to 4 for conviction, and the Government said the case would be retried.

Both Justices on Vacation

Both justices are on vacation and could not be reached at once for comment.

Smith said he was thinking of amending his bill to limit testimony of Federal judges in any case to questions of fact that could not be obtained elsewhere.

He said he did not know whether Frankfurter and Reed had been subpenaed or appeared voluntarily, but in any event it had raised some interesting questions. It was brought out in New York that they were not subpenaed.

WOL Forum To Debate Red Right to Teach

The right of Communists to be employed as teachers will be debated at 10 o'clock tonight on the American Forum of the Air over radio station WOL.

Dr. John K. Norton, chairman of the National Education Association's educational policies commission, and Roger Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, will argue the question.

The NEA commission recently recommended that Communists be banned from the teaching profession.

Guard Rights Of Minorities, Pastor Urges

Reckless application of the term "subversive" to "decent and loyal citizens who are advocating necessary changes in our social structure" was condemned yesterday by the Rev. C. Stanley Lowell, pastor of Wesley Methodist Church.

The minister warned his congregation that careless use of such words "denies their function as conveyors of truth and makes them representatives of prejudice or selfish ambition.

"Subversive," he said, "ought to be meticulously reserved for those who are out to destroy our country."

He listed "democracy" and "Christianity" as two other words that need strict and careful definition.

"We must take democracy to mean a government genuinely concerned for the welfare of the people," he said.

"It stands for freedom of religion, freedom of speech and assembly, freedom of the press and radio, freedom of scientific inquiry, and freedom of education. It means respect for the rights of minority groups and equality of opportunity for all."

Mr. Lowell said that "Christianity" is "more than ritual, liturgy, hymns and sermons.

"It must become the concern of all Christian people to feed and house and clothe and heal and help all the sons of men who are in need. A Christianity which means less than this is not fully Christian."

Politics Seen In Reds' Trial

New York, July 17 (AP).—Representative Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.) charged today the indictment of 11 top United States Communists was a "vote-getting proposition" to aid the election of President Truman.

His charge was made before a "Bill of Rights" conference, whose sponsors President Truman recently referred to as that gang.

Marcantonio said "I charge, without congressional immunity, that the trial is the ill-begotten child of unscrupulous politicians who are playing a most dangerous fascist game."

He said the Eighty-first Congress had passed "not a single piece of civil rights legislation."

"And this," Marcantonio added, "from Harry Truman and his party—I withdraw the word—Harry Truman and his gang."

He accused Mr. Truman of speaking "glibly" of civil rights, while "deep down in his heart he echoes the feelings of the men who seek to negate not only the first 10 amendments but also the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth."

Report Is Due Today on Blair House Parley

By The Associated Press

Chairman McMahon (D., Conn.) said yesterday he probably will report to the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee today on what went on at the super-secret Blair House conference.

The conference at President Truman's temporary residence across from the White House was held Friday evening. It was attended by Cabinet members, high-ranking military and atomic officials and congressional leaders in foreign relations and the atomic program.

McMahon was accompanied to Blair House by some other members of the Joint Atomic Committee, including Senator Hickenlooper (R., Iowa), bitter critic of the Atomic Energy Commission. But more than half of the 18-member unit did not attend.

The committee has a meeting behind closed doors scheduled for this morning. Asked whether he would report on the Blair House conference at that time, McMahon said:

"I am still thinking about whether I should, but I probably will."

Today's meeting has been called primarily to let the committee get started on a private study of charges by Hickenlooper that the Atomic Energy Commission had been lax in the security clearance of persons engaged in the atomic program.

Spingarn Medal Given Dr. Bunche By Indian Envoy

Hollywood, July 17 (U.P.).—Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Palestine mediator, today accepted the Spingarn Medal, awarded annually to an American Negro for outstanding achievement.

In ceremonies in Hollywood Bowl, Bunche pleaded that American democracy be fulfilled by elimination of racial intolerance.

"The Negro American today holds only a bridgehead on the periphery of American democracy. But that bridgehead is strong and the assault will continue until the objective is won," he told an audience of 19,000.

Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, Indian Ambassador to the United States, presented the thirty-fourth Springarn Medal as part of the convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colard People.

Free Camp Open For 75 Children, Mission Advises

The Central Union Mission last night announced that it has 75 openings for boys and girls 8 to 12 years of age who want to attend a free summer camp for two weeks.

Children who want to sign up should bring their parents to the registration offices at 624 Indiana ave. nw. The next two-week period will begin July 25. Children who don't make it that period can sign up for a later session, the Mission announced.

The camp is located at Brookville, Md., and offers swimming, playgrounds, handicrafts and a daily vacation Bible school. The camp is now in its twenty-sixth year.

Miracle Needed

'52-20' Club For Veterans Facing End

By the United Press

Barring a legislative miracle, the "52-20 Club" for jobless veterans goes out of business in another week.

Chairman Rankin (D., Miss.) said yesterday that his House Veterans Committee plans no action to keep alive the Federal payments that currently are going to more than 500,000 unemployed former servicemen weekly.

In the absence of congressional action, the GI bill of rights provision under which jobless World War II veterans draw $20 checks for up to 52 weeks, expires for most former servicemen on July 25.

President Truman has asked for a year's extension, and a Senate Labor Subcommittee has recommended it. But no action has been taken by the full committee, and the possibility of Senate action this week is slim.

Even if the Senate should act, the legislation would have to clear Rankin's committee to get to the House floor. Rankin has made it plain that won't happen.

"What they are trying to do now is get some of the sit-down money for fellows who have spent the last four years in school, with Uncle Sam footing the bill," Rankin told a reporter.

Burmese Rebels Routed

Rangoon, July 17 (AP).—Burmese troops threw rebel Karens out of the stronghold of Daiku yesterday, officials said today. Daiku is a rail town 85 miles north of here.

Pay Increase Faces Threat

House members questioned this and especially criticized a proposal to have one officer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, act as top military adviser for the President.

A Senate-House conference probably will get the tough job of trying to work out a compromise.

President Truman, under his broad new power to reorganize Government agencies, subject to congressional approval, has let it be known that he stands ready with his own unification order to supplement congressional action if he thinks it doesn't meet the needs.

Even though Tydings' committee may stamp approval on the increased pay schedule, the chairman is expected to stall Senate action until the unification dispute is settled.

Herman W. Steinkraus, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, yesterday urged the House Armed Services Committee to act promptly on the Senate-approved defense unification bill.

He sent the committe a statement by the chamber's board of directors indorsing the general nature of the bill and calling for its passage as a means of achieving Government economy.

"I have followed the debate in the Armed Services Committee and I am sympathetic toward the problems which confront you," Steinkraus said. "The fact remains, however, that we are approaching the end of the first session of the Eighty-first Congress.

"I hope that your committee will do everything it can to speed House approval of the legislation which would give the Nation the advantage of greater efficiency and economy in the management of the Department of Defense."

Cut-Rate Aircoach Attracts Travelers

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

If you have any doubt the traveling public will do almost anything in search of a bargain, drop out to National Airport any night half an hour after midnight.

You'll see dozens of Washingtonians plus just as many visitors to the city lined up to board an aircoach—the biggest thing in cheap air travel and right now the hottest thing in aviation.

The aircoach is another proof that the public is nursing its dollars, that there are plenty of things Americans want to do and want to buy—but they want the price to be right. And transportation prices have been high—especially on planes.

How System Works

Here are the facts:

You can fly on Capital Airlines' aircoaches from Washington to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee or the Twin Cities for practically the same price as a railroad coach ticket. To Pittsburgh the air fare is actually $1.64 less than by train.

Time-wise, of course, air service is much quicker. It takes only an hour and a quarter to fly to Pittsburgh, while one railroad takes 6¾ hours and the other 8 hours on the fastest trains.

Even allowing for the fact that the airlines frequently fail to meet their schedules, plus the longer time necessary to go and come from airports, the time saving is great. On a trip to the Midwest or the West Coast it is immense.

Fare Big Attraction

But the big come-on which is filling Capital's nightly aircoach planes out of Washington is the fare.

During June a plane left every night as scheduled. The planes, for that month, left National Airport filled to 87.5 per cent of capacity.

Last Wednesday night, one aircoach took off at 12:30 a. m. with every one of its 50 seats occupied—plus three additional babes-in-arms. In all, a dozen children were aboard. (A second plane leaves here at 1:01 a. m. on a slightly different route.)

A sampling of cash customers turned up these reasons for taking the plane—and remember they arrived in Pittsburgh at 1:44 a. m., in Cleveland at 2:46 a. m., Detroit at 3:32 a. m., and Chicago at 4:30 in the morning.

Passengers Tell Why

Miss Myrtle Bergheim, 2222 I st. nw., personal secretary to Charles Ross at the White House: "It's an inexpensive way to go on a vacation."

Miss Eve Levy of Ann Arbor, Mich., after a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Krause of 1214 Tewkesbury pl. nw.:

"It's a money saver after you've spent a lot on a trip. Of course it's rather difficult to ask anyone other than somebody in your family to meet you in the middle of the night."

Miss Dorothy Early, 2622 P st. nw.:

"Well, I'm going to a wedding. I guess the extra money saved will help buy a wedding present."

Mrs. Eula Rush of Minot, S. Dak., who had come to Washington with her husband to visit their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Johnson, 220 E. George Mason rd., Falls Church, Va.:

"It's a big saving over the regular plane fare to Minneapolis." (The saving is $20.81 or almost a third of the regular air fare, including the 15 per cent tax. Aircoach fare is $5.16 more than rail coach to Minneapolis.)

Babies Go Along

Mrs. Glenn J. Darst of 13 E. Bellefonte ave., Alexandria, traveling with Greta Ann, 2½, and Michael, 18 months:

"We're going to Montana on a vacation and it's a lot cheaper."

Almost all the other Washington area travelers said the same thing. Some of them were Mrs. Adeline Dowling of 1304 Saratoga ave. ne., sister of Miss Bergheim, who was traveling with 1-year-old Stephen Dowling; Mr. and Mrs. August Zuhlsdorf of Waterton, S. Dak., who had been here for the wedding of their daughter, Mrs. Campbell Ramsay, 13 Bates st. nw.; Mrs. Donald Gray of Annandale, Va., whose husband is a District official and who was traveling with Dinah, 6, and Bill, 9.

The majority of the aircoach travelers are women, with a large sprinkling of children. Businessmen usually are less concerned with the price of the ticket and more with hours of travel and ride the regular day trips. Some passengers, such as a soldier and a sailor going home on leave, were on the aircoach merely because it was the first plane they could catch out of Washington.

Some Drawbacks Noted

There are drawbacks. Here are some:

Connections are bad in most cities. Of all the Nation's airlines, only five or six are offering the same kind of night coach service. Schedules generally are made up to permit connection between airlines on day flights but not on these night runs. Several of last Wednesday's passengers, however, were transferring at the Twin Cities to Northwest's aircroach for the West Coast.

While actual plane fares are competitive with train coach ticket prices, the cost of getting to and from airports is much higher. Regular airline taxi fare in Washington to National Airport is 85 cents, in Pittsburgh, $1.30. You can go to the stations on a streetcar.

Unless you are leaving or arriving at your own home at the middle-of-the-night hours the aircoaches fly, it's inconvenient. Adding the price of a hotel room, of course, wipes out any saving.

But the speed of air travel is the lure of the airlines—just over seven hours to the Twin Cities against almost 23 by train.

One unusual advantage of the aircoach is this: planes usually ride smoother by night than by day because temperature differences between ground and air are less, cutting down turbulence. Air travel undoubtedly is more restful, for example, to Pittsburgh than a rail trip.

The aircoach is an experiment. Authority for the present limited service expires September 30, and the Civil Aeronautics Board now is studying the facts and figures to determine wether it shall be continued.

Capital, as the only line running the service out of Washington, offers some interesting figures:

From last November 4, when the service first was offered on the New York-Chicago run, through June 30, some 68,607 passengers have been carried.

The "passenger load factor"—the percentage of the seats filled—on the New York-Chicago run has risen month by month this spring from 69 per cent in March to 82 to 87 to 92 as weather improved and vacation arrived. On the Washington-Chicago run, begun April 1, comparable figures were 75 per cent in April, 79 in May and 87.5 in June. The break-even point for the airline is around 50 per cent of the seats filled.

Weekend Demand

The service out of Washington on weekends now is so popular the Friday night flight is sold out for two or three weeks in advance and extra planes—extra "sections," they are called—are the regular thing.

All of which would seem to prove once again that the way to be a business success in America is very simple: give the customer more for his money.

And for the aviation industry in particular: take a lesson from the Nation's big mass production industries, and give the traveler cheaper transportation on a mass basis and you'll make more in the end.

If the traveling public will turn out in the middle of the night to save money on tickets, what would the public do at the same price in the daytime? It could even be that postwar dream we used to read about, when everybody was flying everywhere, fast, safely and cheap.

House Group to Confer on New Labor Bill

By the United Press

A rank-and-file group of House Democrats revealed yesterday they plan to force a showdown on Taft-Hartley law repeal despite the reluctance of Administration leaders.

The group, sparked by Representative Jacobs (D., Ind.), scheduled a meeting for today, and Jacobs expects 30 Representatives to attend.

"We are going to see whether we cannot get together on some kind of a good labor bill that can pass the House," he said. "It may be a futile hope, but at least we will try."

Jacobs, a freshman legislator and a labor lawyer in private life, said he has written personally to the 30 legislators. He said they include both Republicans and members of his own party.

The Senate recently rejected President Truman's plea to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and reenact an "improved" Wagner law. Instead, it passed a labor bill written by Senator Taft (R., Ohio) and retaining almost every important Taft-Hartley feature.

The House rejected the Administration's labor law proposals early in May. Then, instead of passing a new bill, it sent the whole issue back to the House Labor Committee for study.

House leaders have made it plain they would like to forget the whole issue, at least until next year. They are positive the House will refuse to pass any bill that could be signed by the President.

Rails Defend Safety Record Fighting ICC

By the United Press

Railroad officials yesterday hotly defended their safety records in the face of legislation authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to require them to install train communications systems for safety's sake.

Officials of the Association of American Railroads denounced as "a new kind of Government control" a bill approved last week by a House Interstate Commerce Subcommittee. They maintained it would let the Government interfere with "physical operation" of the carriers.

Under the bill, the commission could direct the railroads to install block signal systems, automatic train stops or other communications systems, including radio, telephone and telegraph. These devices would have to be installed wherever the commission thought they were needed.

Preacher Calls Klan Lawless, Cowardly Group

Soperton, Ga., July 17 (U.P.)—A young Methodist minister today denounced the Ku Klux Klan as "a bunch of lawless cowards" following a revival of the hooded order's activities here Saturday night.

The Rev. W. R. Woodall, a veteran of World War II, told his congregation that Saturday's parade and cross-burning was an insult to the integrity and decency of the peace-loving people of our community."

This small South Georgia town caught the Nation's attention two months ago when Maj. James Peterson unmasked and arrested three Klansmen in the city streets. The three were later cleared of disorderly conduct and loitering charges in a municipal court.

This was the first demonstration here by the Klan since the court action. One hundred and fifty robed and hooded Klansmen paraded through town in a 40-car caravan. They set off a cross in the mid-town area.

CIO News Cites Truce in Steel To Hit T-H Act

By the United Press

The CIO News yesterday said President Truman's successful effort to avert a steel strike "demonstrated that it's not necessary for the Government to 'crack down' with an injunction when somebody starts shouting 'national emergency.'"

Mr. Truman obtained a 60-day postponement of the strike by CIO United Steelworkers by setting up a fact-finding panel to make recommendations for settlement of the dispute. United States Steel Corp. and other big companies accepted only a few hours before the strike deadline Friday midnight.

The board is scheduled to meet with Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman this morning to map preliminary procedures for conducting a 45-day inquiry.

The CIO News said the board's findings, while not binding on either party, "will have considerable effect on settlement of the controversy."

"The findings—if based on well-known facts—will show the steel industry in an excellent position to grant the union what it asks," the paper said. "It indeed will be interesting then to see whether United States Steel has learned to say anything other than 'no.'"

Petrillo Letter Cited As Aid to Miller

Battle's "outside labor support" charges.

Battle warned that "this is just the beginning," and that he will take up the question in more detail Tuesday night in a radio address from Newport News.

Battle will go to Arlington for a reception Wednesday evening at the home of Harry K. Green, 1407 N. Barton st. On Thursday, he will hold a press conference in Alexandria; address a women's luncheon at 12:30 p. m., at Laura Lee's Old Club there; attend a tea at 4 p. m., at the Courthouse Country Club in Fairfax County; attend a public reception at the George Mason Hotel, Alexandria, at 6:30 p. m.; and address a rally at the George Washington High School at Alexandria at 8 p. m.

In a statement, Miller called for reexamination of all State labor laws passed during the administration of the encumbent Governor Tuck.

"The truth is," he said, "that 35 other States had fewer strikes than Virginia in 1948. The highly industrialized State of Connecticut had only half the number of strikes Virginia had last year and North Carolina only one-fourth as many."

Says Battle Backed Laws

Senator Battle has supported these labor laws, Miller said. Miller added that "if in the light of experience any law proves itself bad, I shall use all my influence to have its bad features removed."

He also attacked the proposal of another candidate, Horace H. Edwards, for a sales tax to finance school improvements.

As this took place, Edwards issued a statement that his proposed sales tax would net a total of $6,426,000 for Arlington and Fairfax Counties and Alexandria in a four-year period.

Of that amount, he said, $2,545,440 would go to Arlington; $2,376,240 to Fairfax, and $1,504,320 to Alexandria.

At Norfolk, Vivian L. Page, a 20-year veteran of the Virginia Legislature and often a "stormy petrel" of politics, declared his support of Battle, saying he finds nothing wrong with "machine support" of the candidate.

At Lynchburg, supporters of Miller made public two letters that they said proved that Battle sought support of the CIO, for which he criticized Miller.

The letters were written last January 20 and 25 to James C. Crist of Local 90, United Shoe Workers, and chairman of a local CIO political action committee.

Asked Personal Support

Both letters, reported signed by Battle, asked Crist's support in his campaign. But they were addressed to Crist as an individual and not as a labor leader. Crist says he does not know Battle personally, but that he was for two years State vice president of the CIO and suspects Battle knows his identity. However, the letters asked only Crist's personal support and did not mention labor organizations.

Schedules for the four Democratic candidates for this week, announced thus far:

Battle: Richmond and Halifax County, Monday; Tappahannock, Tuesday; Arlington, Wednesday; Alexandria, Thursday; later unannounced.

Edwards: Portsmouth, Monday; Danville and Fifth District, Tuesday; Lynchburg and Sixth District, Wednesday; Roanoke, Thursday, with radio address at 8 p. m.; Russell County and Ninth District, Friday; Ninth District address, Saturday.

Miller: Stafford County, Monday; First District, Tuesday and Wednesday; Norfolk, Thursday; later unannounced.

Lever Brothers Cuts Soap, Spry Prices

Cambridge, Mass., July 17 (AP)—Lever Brothers Co. today announced price cuts of from 4 to 9 per cent in the wholesale prices of its soap products.

The company also said it was reducing the price of spry, a shortening, by 2 cents a pound. Lever Brothers said the cuts result from a decline in the cost of raw materials.

Big Bug in Bosom Of Jittery Star Stops Dallas Show

Dallas, July 17 (U.P.)—Manette Fabray, Broadway musical star, broke down tonight and began to scream in the midst of a song before a packed house at the open air casino in Fair Park.

She was singing the leading role, "Evalina," in the starlight opera production of "Bloomer Girl," when a huge bug swooped down and struck her square in the face and then fell into her bosom.

Miss Fabray swiped at the bug, turned her back to the audience and shouted into the wings: "I can't go on! I can't go on!"

Then she started to scream. Another member of the cast hurried onto the stage and led her into the wing, where she screamed for approximately three minutes.

A spokesman for the operetta company appeared on the stage then and advised the audience that the show would not go on.

Bugs had been bothersome to the performers throughout the show. Miss Fabray, jauntily waving a parasol, had just started to sing "Sunday in Cicero Falls" when the bug broke up the show.

Nora Eddington Now Wife of Dick Haymes

Hollywood, July 17 (U.P.)—Red-haired Nora Eddington, one-time cigarette girl, today married Dick Haymes, 30, and after a brief reception locked the doors of his new house for a stay-at-home honeymoon.

$50,000 Dope Uncovered in Honolulu Raid

Honolulu, July 16 (U.P.)—Narcotics valued at $50,000 were seized today by Federal authorities and Honolulu police in a surprise raid on the suburban home of Mrs. Helen Thomas, 28.

Also held for possession of narcotics was Winston Churchill Henry, 39, stocky boss of Little Harlem.

The raid netted 1000 capsules of heroin, a 3-ounce bottle of cocaine, several ounces of bulk marijuana, and many "reefers." (marijuana cigarettes.)

Officers found another cache in the two-story tile home—a late model Army submachine gun, with ammunition, one rifle, and a .25 caliber automatic pistol according to Federal Agent William Wells.

Mrs. Thomas' daughter, 10, a sister, 15, and a man identified as Charles Montgomery, of San Francisco, were in the house. Police said the older girl arrived in Honolulu by plane Friday night under the alias of Marie Johnson.

Aquabatics

Secretary Krug's recent turnabout on the swimming pool issue has left the matter as far from solution as ever—if not farther. In pressing the Secretary to renege on the compromise, to which he had agreed with representatives of the Recreation Board and the District Commissioners, the advocates of immediate and complete nonsegregation have achieved a pyrrhic victory. For the Anacostia episode and experience in such cities as St. Louis and Youngstown demonstrate that unsegregated swimming, launched without adequate preparation of the public mind and adequate safeguards against disorder, brings the closing of the pools.

Mr. Krug has, by buckling under pressure and repudiating his agreement on the pools, put himself in an exposed position. It will be difficult for him to make another about-face to the position he took last week. Unless he can find a way to do so, and we hope he can, he must either run the pools on nonsegretated terms or swallow the issue. The latter is now out of the question, since it has been tied into the President's civil rights program. The former requires policing beyond the strength of the present park police.

The only alternative, thus, appears to be to close all the pools after the Anacostia example. This would be a great triumph of principle, perhaps, but a sore price to pay in practice. And even in principle the victory would be a dubious one since it would not achieve the real aim of interracial use of the pools. That aim, in fact, can be achieved under the best of conditions only after a number of years of educational preparation.

This the Recreation Board might have inaugurated under the July 11 compromise. a majority of its members were at least willing to try, though with no definite timetable of progress. We thought the compromise was a sensible one, and we still think so. We urge both parties to exert their best efforts to reinstitute it. Only in local hands and through gradual adjustment within the community can the ultimate objective be reached.

Mayoralty Dilemma

At last, after a long series of the most categorical declinations in the annals of politics, Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York has consented to run for reelection. We confess to some degree of perplexity over the situation, due, no doubt, to the fact that the system of selecting municipal officials in the metropolis to the north is somewhat different from that which prevails in the District of Columbia. Not long ago we read with regret that the state of Mr. O'Dwyer's health absolutely forbade his becoming a candidate. There was something so firm and, indeed, brusque, about the manner in which the mayor brushed aside the importunate pleading of his friends that for our own part we had bowed to what seemed to be the inevitable. Mr. O'Dwyer gave the impression of a man who liked New York and would be glad to visit there but wouldn't live in the place if you gave it to him.

District Attorney Frank Hogan, apparently convinced like ourselves that the mayor meant what he said, announced his willingness to accept the Democratic nomination from three of the five Democratic county leaders—a step which compounded our confusion, since he had been frequently mentioned as the most likely candidate to oppose Mr. O'Dwyer on a Fusion ticket. Then, suddenly, Mr. O'Dwyer made a quick trip to Washington and had a short chat with President Truman which seemed to work wonders for his physical condition. That very evening he returned to New York, yielded to the importunities of the five Democratic leaders, including those who the day before had nominated Mr. Hogan, and declared that he deemed it his duty in the best interests of the city to run for reelection against the "conniving" of sinister forces. This consigned Mr. Hogan, as nearly as we can figure it out, to oblivion.

This sort of vulgar playing fast and loose with the affections of the voters would not be countenanced, we are proud to say, in our own fair city. When, for example, the term of John Russell Young expired as chairman of the Board of Commissioners, there was no pretense that he would refuse to serve again if reelected, or even if not reelected. A perfectly clear choice was presented to the people of the District as contrasted with the situation in New York, where as many as half a dozen candidates may be nominated in opposition to Mr. O'Dwyer: we were free to like Mr. Young or to lump him, with no nonsense about alternatives.

Influence Peddlers

Sale of influence by former Government officials is an abuse of long standing, although the pickings were not so rich in the days when the Federal Government was one of limited powers and its expenditures were measured in terms of millions instead of billions of dollars. Today the Government is in the market as a heavy buyer of many kinds of goods and materials. It has a host of regulatory agencies whose officials make decisions that vitally affect the fortunes of private industry. The former Government employe who knows from personal experience how the governmental machinery works and has maintained close contacts with former colleagues can render valuable service—in a perfectly legal way—to private corporations and organized groups by helping them to obtain contracts, securing a hearing for grievances or possibly lobbying for changes in regulatory laws.

Mr. Thomas Corcoran, President Roosevelt's close confidant, who at one time served as a special attorney for the RFC, obtained more than $65,000 from a single concern that had been advised as to how to go about securing an RFC loan. Prior to our entry into the war, he drew down $100,000 in fees in one year on four defense contracts. The chief effect of these disclosures seemingly has been to increase the number of former Government officials who are selling their inside knowledge and exploiting their personal contacts. Senator Butler's demand for a congressional investigation of such activities is hardly necessary, since the practices of which he complains are matters of common knowledge. Moreover, it is highly improbable that any of the seven lawyers whom he has singled out for special mention as seekers of influence have committed illegal acts, however "questionable" their activities may be from the viewpoint of the public interest. The shocking aspect of the so-called "influence racket" is that it is so well intrenched that men who have had distinguished records in public life recognize no impropriety in going before Government agencies with which they were once connected to represent private clients.

It appears to us, therefore, that the time has come to pass restrictive legislation such as Senators Butler and Long advocate, forbidding such officials to represent private firms or clients before Government agencies for at least two years following their withdrawal from Government service. A law of this kind would serve two purposes: it would tend to discourage (though it would not eradicate) the abuses at which it is aimed, and it would have a salutary effect on men still holding office. For the knowledge that their public records may commend them to private interests has undoubtedly influenced the decisions and conduct of some public officials. They may unconsciously favor private interests that are looking around for men to fill important positions or to represent them in a legal capacity. The insidious effect of this kind of external pressure would be greatly weakened by the proposed legal restriction.

If too many restrictions were imposed on retiring officials, the Government would find it difficult to recruit competent personnel to man its agencies. But it is quite feasible to impose legal restraints on the specific activities that are chiefly responsible for the flourishing state of the influence racket in this city. We feel sure that the public at large would welcome such action.

Congressional Code

Congress has at last begun to examine the necessity of prescribing a code of fair procedure for its investigating committees. The current hearings before the Senate Rules Committee come in response to a formidable public demand that congressional fact-finders respect the rights of citizens to remain free from irresponsible smearing. That demand was crystallized last January when Majority Leaders Lucas and McCormack of the Senate and House, respectively, introduced a resolution to guide the conduct of all committee hearings. The problem was effectively stated by Senator Lucas when he declared at the opening session of the hearing on Thursday that "if Congress does not have the statesmanship to reform itself, I am afraid its investigations will fall into disrepute."

In the light of recent history, we think it is safe to start with the assumption that a code of fair investigating procedure should be adopted. The real question is what that code should contain. The Lucas-McCormack resolution is a good beginning, although its sponsors would doubtless be first to say that it needs to be critically scrutinized. For, while the chief objective of any such code must necessarily be the elimination of abuses from congressional hearings, an equally important aim must be improvement of the means by which Congress brings vital information to light. In other words, this investigative power is so essential to government by the people that its effectiveness should be enhanced instead of being impaired. Any satisfactory code, in our opinion, must serve both to eliminate abuses and to make the legislative investigation a more useful tool in the hands of Congress.

This latter objective seems to be lost to sight in one provision of the Lucas-McCormack resolution. It would give a person defamed or adversely affected by testimony before a congressional committee the right not only to file a sworn statement for the record and to testify in his own behalf, but also to have the committee summon up to four witnesses to testify for him and to cross-examine witnesses appearing against him for a period up to one hour each. The result might be serious obstruction of important committee investigations. Communists summoned before any committee, for example, would be quick to claim damage to their reputation and thus win the right, under the proposed rule, to waste hours or days of time. While protecting citizens against loose slander, Congress ought to avoid fashioning unnecessary hobbles for itself.

In our series of editorials entitled Turning On The Light, in which we pleaded for the right of defamed persons to defend themselves before investigating committees, we also pointed out that limitations upon this right are essential "to avoid disruption of inquiries or their diversion to irrelevant issues." Where that limit is to be drawn is probably the most difficult issue the Rules Committee will have to decide. We have no doubt, however, that it can be drawn so as to afford maligned citizens much greater protection than they now have without interfering with any legitimate investigation.

Unfair To Judges

Representative Keating is offering a bill to prohibit members of the Supreme Court from testifying as character witnesses before other tribunals, as if it were an essential check upon the discretion of those judges. In some measure that view may be valid, but we suspect that the chief value of such a measure would lie in the protection it would give against unreasonable demands upon judges. At present they have no alternative to testifying before trial courts if they are subpenaed. Our inquiries suggest that judges as a group are extremely reluctant to go on the witness stand because it takes them out of their role as impartial agents of justice. Probably a great majority of them would welcome a law relieving them of this necessity.

Any accused person who calls upon a friend on the bench to testify in his behalf puts the judge in question on the spot. The judge cannot refuse without seeming cruel and unfaithful to his friend, and he cannot accept the bid for his help without embarrassment to himself and to the judicial system as a whole. A law of the type Congressman Keating suggests would relieve Supreme Court justices of this dilemma as well as of the duty of responding to subpenas as character witnesses, while leaving them free to testify if they have knowledge of facts bearing upon the case.

But why should Mr. Keating confine his bill to Supreme Court justices? Until Justices Frankfurter and Reed testified in behalf of Alger Hiss no member of the Supreme bench had been called as a character witness within the memory of man. On the contrary, judges in the lower Federal courts are often embarrassed by being asked or subpenaed to express their views as to the reputation of some friend or acquaintance who has been charged with a criminal offense. Certainly if the practice is to be stopped, it should be stopped in the Federal district courts and the courts of appeals as well as in the Supreme Court. If the bill should be thus amended, it would not be surprising to see many judges indorse it.

Small Change

It would have been extremely niggardly, not to say ungallant, on the part of the House of Representatives to refuse to pick up the tab for Elizabeth T. Bentley's stay in Washington while she was the guest of the good-time Charlies of the Committee on Un-American Activities. Miss Bentley gave the boys quite a whirl while she was here. They painted the town red in her honor; it's a little late to start complaining about the size of the check the morning after. Besides, Miss Bentley's $526 hotel bill must be reckoned a very minor item in comparison with the value of other gifts conferred on her and with the cost of the spree to Congress in terms of its own prestige.

Miss Bentley seems to have pretty heartlessly jilted her beaux on the Hill. When the opportunity came to back up her charges about William Remington, she just couldn't be found; very properly, he was completely exonerated by the Loyalty Review Board. It is rather significant, moreover, that not a single one of the numerous persons she named as members of the espionage rings she said she served has been indicted or charged in any way with violation of the law. We can conclude from this only that the Department of Justice, which has shown no reluctance to prosecute in espionage cases, prudently assumed that no jury could be persuaded to give credence to her testimony.

Why Miss Bentley herself has not been indicted for espionage is rather more difficult to explain. Her situation is substantially different from that of Whittaker Chambers, who confessed to having acted as a Communist courier only in the peaceful period of the 1930s. Although what Mr. Chambers says he did was clearly violative of the Espionage Act, the statute of limitations gives him immunity from punishment for that crime. But Miss Bentley says she did her espionage work while the United States was at war. The Espionage Act provides that whoever shall violate its provisions forbidding disclosure of information relating to the national defense in time of war "shall be punished by death or by imprisonment for not more than 30 years." And according to Title 18, section 581a of the United States Code, "An indictment for any offense punishable by death may be found at any time without regard to any statute of limitations." It would appear that either the real price of Miss Bentley's wild party was a promise of immunity—or else there was no evidence to corroborate her story.

Catholic Position

In your editorial of June 25, "Attack on Barden," you try to defend the Barden Federal-aid-to-education bill by saying: "Nothing in the language of the bill or in its effect prohibits a State from using its own funds for such services (health and transportation) to nonpublic school students."

Congress has absolutely no power to impose such a prohibition on the States, as your editorial writer must know. No one supporting the Catholic position on Federal aid would raise such an objection to the bill. The objection is to the prohibition of the use of Federal funds, and State funds matching Federal funds, for such purposes. The issue, after all, is Federal, not State, aid to education.

Joseph M. Dawson made a very odd statement in his July 9 letter. "Protestants doubtless in the aggregate have more schools than our Roman Catholic brethren." Because Protestants do not ask for Federal aid, he continues, Catholics should not.

What are the facts? The International Council of Religious Education held a meeting in Columbus, Ohio, last February. Rev. Clarence Peters, Lutheran pastor in St. Louis, there stated that enrollment in Lutheran parochial schools had climbed to 96,041 by 1947, in Adventist to 35,219, in Mennonite to 2106, and in Catholic to 2,607,879.

In the preface to his recent volume on Christianity and American Education, Prof. Edwin H. Rian, a Protestant educator, says (speaking, not of parochial schools, but of entire systems) that Roman Catholic schools have an enrollment of three million students and Protestant schools less than one million.

In the February 15, 1949, issue of Social Action, published by the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches and a commission of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, Ray Gibbons writes: "In view of the fact that almost all parochial schools are Roman Catholic it would be, at the present time, practically impossible for the Government to aid all religious bodies equally . . ." (p. 13). Mr. Gibbons seems quite unaware that "Protestants doubtless in the aggregate have more schools . . ."

If Mr. Dawson means by "schools" such units as Sunday schools, he should say so. Catholics never ask for aid for specifically religious instruction, but only for aid to educational institutions which give the same general education given in the public schools.

Imports In Trade

In his July 9 article "Roots of the Financial Crisis," Marquis Childs says of the foreign trade situation, "The answer then is to export American production by any and all means. It must be made possible for so-called backward peoples to raise their own standards and then eventually they may become customers for America's high technology—radios, television and so on."

I would like to ask one question of Mr. Childs. Do we have reason to believe that nations, once they are industrialized, will find things to send us in quantity adequate for repaying their debts? Perhaps there are some things which the presently underdeveloped countries could make more satisfactorily than we can, but, if so, it seems that such possibilities should be mentioned when the desirability of our increasing our exports is advocated.

After all, England is industrialized and she cannot seem to trade with us at this time to any satisfactory degree. Mr. Childs does not mention any future payment for us. He merely indicates the probability, that other countries, after they have raised their standards of living, will be willing customers for such things as television. However, there is no problem right now in finding people who would like to accept American goods of all sorts, including television sets. The problem is to find something which these people can send us as payment for our products.

Adjustment of prices in international trade is a difficult process. It is also a complicated task to adjust American domestic policies of distribution of wealth so that an adequate market can be maintained here for available goods. However, the difficulties of solving trade problems offer no excuse for postponing the facing of them. "Exports without imports are gifts" and when vast exporting is suggested, it would be well to mention some of the possibilities in the way of compensatory imports to be accepted now or in the future.

"Planning Commission"

I read your July 7 editorial on the "Planning Commission."

Your fine estimate of Dean Wurster, the commission's new chairman, is a stimulating one—one which as a fellow member of the commission I am happy to share.

As his associate on the commission, I shall do all I can to contribute to and support a wholesome, progressive program. It will take such action to justify the generous goodwill you have expressed in my behalf—for which I am very grateful. HILYARD R. ROBINSON.

Hawaiian Lament

After reading an article in the Honolulu Star-Bulletin concerning President Truman's attitude regarding the Hawaiian dock strike, it appears that he (Mr. Truman) and his Administration have no concern for the welfare of the 540,000 people living in the Territory of Hawaii.

From this article, there should be little doubt in our minds that we have no representation in our Federal Government, as represented by Mr. Truman, and this being the case, we, the people of Hawaii, should withhold and refuse to pay any more Federal income taxes until something is done by the Administration about this intolerable strike.

Smoking Investigation

The bill to determine the effect that smoking has on people's health and efficiency, which was introduced recently by Representative Granger of Utah, is timely. A law that would result in better health, the loss of fewer lives, and less destruction of property and forests should be given priority.

This bill, which also provides for an investigation of certain claims made by tobacconists, ought, therefore, to receive the full support of all people who are interested in meeting the situations mentioned above brought under control.

Bombay Airport

In your July 13 editorial, "Blow to the Press," you classify Bombay (Santa Cruz) airport as "supposedly unequipped with landing aids." Santa Cruz is an international airport and is equipped with radio range, radio beacon (with continuous transmission) each with an approved instrument letdown procedure; tower and area radio control on continuous operation.

The approved procedures call for an immediate climb to 400 feet, if the plane is not in definite contact with the field, after reaching either the range station or the radio beacon . . . and the instructions call for that climb to be made on magnetic bearings which would not bring any plane over the 674-foot (not 800) hill of Ghatkopar. TWA and BOAC use the airport regularly.

The United States Air Force publishes charts for both the range and beacon procedures and these would certainly be available to the air attache in New Delhi (where the plane was on the night before the crash).

Your editorial gives the impression that the fault lies with the Indian government and the airport at Bombay when the available facts point more to pilot error or planning error.

EDWIN D. SORENSON.
Washington.

Editor's note: We intended no implication that the Indian government was at fault. We were, however, in error in surmising that the Santa Cruz airport was unequipped with landing aids. Procedures for bad weather landings are in effect, although, according to our information, Santa Cruz does not make use of the instrument landing system (ILS) standard at U. S. airports.

No Aid To Chiang

Reports from Washington warn us that high Kuomintang and American officials are urging stronger aid to Chiang Kai-shek. There could be no civil war in China were it not for United States aid. For how could Chiang possibly maintain his oppressive rule in any corner of China if he did not receive this foreign support? But despite this aid, Chiang Kai-shek is now so discredited among the local Chinese, that his picture is no longer displayed in their stores.

Many of his best men are deserting him to join the Peoples Liberation Army, while the majority of people in the southern provinces eagerly await its arrival. Surely this is evidence that further aid to Chiang Kai-shek would merely prolong the civil war and cause further misery and death to the long-suffering Chinese.

Chiang is seeking new allies among the reactionaries of the world. In the meantime his American planes are bombing cities and civilians, factories and merchant ships irrespective of what flag they fly. And by his blockade of seaports, he plans to starve the people into submission.

What puzzles me is why the American people in the interest of their high standard of living do not protest this support of Chiang. Surely they know that he and other corrupt officials have many hundreds of millions in United States funds cached in American vaults.

In contrast, the new democracy government does not tolerate racketeers. It maintains law and order justly and distributes food, clothing and shelter fairly so that none need suffer. Instead of squandering billions on Chiang Kai-shek, the United States should ignore his blockade and use battleships to convoy merchant ships. This would assure the establishment of friendly relations and the resulting trade would mean a business boom—not a bust—in the U. S. A. JAING JOEDING.

Matter of Fact

By Joseph Alsop

How The General Will Curse

IN A GOOD MANY WAYS, Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan explains the failure of the Truman Administratioon on the domestic front. With the very best intentions in the world, Harry S. Truman has continuously tried to give this country progressive government. But he has not done so.

The trouble is that the two essentials of successful progressive government are, first, ideas, and, second, ideals. You cannot very well progress, unless you have some notion of where you want to go and why. And you cannot induce people to follow you along the difficult road of social change, unless you can inspire them with an inner fire and excitement. For these reasons, the fact that the President has chosen such a favorite as his military aide becomes exceedingly significant.

Certainly no one would ever accuse General Vaughan, with his peculiar talent for blunders in smoking-room stories, of possessing either ideals or ideas. He himself, no doubt, would scorn the imputation. And a presidential atmosphere in which General Vaughan can bloom and flourish, is not the sort of atmosphere in which new deals, or square deals, or new freedoms are born. If the President's "Fair Deal" is not taken altogether seriously, it is because Vaughan and the other less colorful, more importantly placed men of his stripe, are so impossible to picture as leaders of a great crusade.

BUT WHAT MAKES the subject of General Vaughan pertinent at the moment is not the interesting question of what the general really thinks about housing or social security or national resources conservation. It is, rather, the fact the general is probably about to become a serious political issue.

The truth is—as Saturday's events demonstrated—there was a good deal more than comedy in the New York Herald Tribune's brilliant study of the life and habits of the Washington "5 percenter," Col. James V. Hunt. This busy little man, it may be recalled, is one of the swarming high-pressure operators who take fat fees from businessmen for getting them contracts and favors from the Government.

Photographs of the great, if possible suitably inscribed, are standard equipment in the offices of the 5 per cent tribe. Prominent in Colonel Hunt's picture gallery was General Vaughan. Most often, of course, the photographs in such offices are mere bait for boobs. If the average 5 percenter delivers on his promises, it is not because of friendships with the great, but because of his familiarity with the shabby by-ways of the Government. The joke is, however, that Colonel Hunt was evidently not a fraud of this sort.

Perhaps the colonel was not intimate with all the originals of all the photographs he so proudly displayed. But at least it seems that he was genuinely close to General Vaughan, and genuinely able to secure General Vaughan's help for his clients. Important documentary evidence to this effect is now in the hands of the Senate Investigating Committee.

Detailed disclosure must await a public inquiry. But a public inquiry is undoubtedly justified, and indeed made necessary, by the indications that are available to date of the nature of the Vaughan-Hunt relationship. Army contracts are involved, and so are the careers of Army officers—which, lends special interest to the recent White House blockade of an Army promotion list, commonly attributed to the White House military aide. Other kinds of favors, such as permits for race tracks, crop up here and there.

ALTOGETHER, if what is known to date cannot be disproved by General Vaughan, he will appear on the records as one of the most useful and obliging friends a 5 percenter ever had. What makes the joke all the better is the absence of any indication that General Vaughan's favors were ever substantially reciprocated. Apparently he lent himself to the 5 percenter's profitable game for the pure pleasure of showing what a very big man he was.

The absence of any imputation that General Vaughan was cut in on Colonel Hunt's profits does not make the matter much less serious, however. It is squalid that this sort of thing should go on in the American Government. It is worse than squalid that it should be assisted by the borrowed authority of the White House. It casts a sharp light on the prevailing standards of public conduct.

Those standards need to be carefully reconsidered. A solution is urgently needed for the basic problem of staffing the Government of this country in such a way that petty fixers and 5 per centers will not find cracks and crevasses to aid them in their upward climb toward prosperity and glory. And for these deeply serious reasons, the chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee, Senator Clyde Hoey, and its chief investigator, William Rogers, are pushing forward their inquiry as rapidly as possible.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The European Arms Tangle

THE OPPOSING Senators, debating arms and the Pact, have arrived at a curious paradox. Mr. Vandenberg and Mr. Dulles, who believe in supplying arms, are contending stoutly that the Senators will be under "no obligation of any kind whatsoever to give arms to any country." But Mr. Taft, who would prefer not to give arms, is telling the other Senators that when the Pact is ratified, they will be in honor bound to vote for an arms bill.

Lippmann

They all assume that the Pact will be ratified. The logic of the debate would, therefore, compel Mr. Taft to insist that Mr. Wherry is morally bound to vote for an arms bill to which he objects; Mr. Vandenberg would then have to contradict Mr. Taft and defend Mr. Wherry's moral right to vote against an arms bill!

THIS TANGLE can be untangled when the Senate takes up the arms bill itself. In that basic legislation, rather than in the treaty itself, the question of our obligations can be clarified, and the substantial objections which trouble Mr. Taft met with good faith to the other signatories.

MR. DULLES has said that there is no obligation to give arms to any country. But he would not maintain, I am sure, that there is no obligation to contribute to making the alliance stronger.

Now there is a great difference between an obligation to each and every other nation and an obligation to the alliance collectively. In the one case there would exist a treaty right, say by Norway or Italy, to receive American arms. It is against such a treaty right that Mr. Taft's powerful and, I believe, convincing argument is really directed.

But if the obligation runs only to the alliance collectively, we are free to make an honest judgment as to what arms will serve the purpose of the alliance. No nation as such will have a treaty claim against us. Norway or the Netherlands or France or Britain will have to persuade their European partners as well as the United States and Canada that the particular weapons they want will in fact strengthen, not their own national or imperial defenses separately and as such but, the coalition during a war of aggression in Europe.

This will protect us against the waste and the confusion and the charges of bad faith that could so readily develop if our obligation were construed as a series of bilateral obligations,—as in fact foreshadowing a series of contracts, like in ECA, between Washington and London, Washington and Paris, Washington and Oslo, etc., etc.

THIS IS a faithful interpretation, I submit, of what in actual fact Mr. Acheson, Mr. Vandenberg and Mr. Dulles believe. Yet it ought to meet Mr. Taft's substantial objection. For Mr. Taft has not argued that he is opposed to supplying any arms to any country, He has said that he is "quite willing to consider the providing of assistance to particular countries, at particular times, if such aid seems at that time a real deterrent to war." But he will not bind this country "to build up the armed forces of 11 countries" for 20 years.

Now this country will not be bound to build up the armed forces of 11 countries if the obligation is defined as help to build up only the alliance as such. Then each country will have to prove not that it needs arms for its own national interests but solely for the common strategic plan. In the development of that plan the United States would naturally play a leading, indeed the deciding role.

THE PLACE and the time to clarify all this is in the arms legislation itself. The text of the proposed bill has not yet been published. If it does not now clarify these issues, it should be redrawn in consultation with the leading Senators, including Mr. Taft, so that it does express clearly and correctly the real American obligation.

Then there will be no need for reservations to the Pact or for declarations about the Pact. The Senate should be told by the Administration that it can ratify the Pact on the understanding that the arms bill will make it plain as a matter of law that there is no obligation to separate countries but only an obligation to contribute to a common strategic defense.

OUR EUROPEAN partners have a duty and an interest to assist the United States Government in clarifying these questions. In the first place they should repudiate the frivolous idea that the Pact is meaningless without the arms bill. They should recognize that the Pact itself, which commits the whole power of the United States to war in case of aggression, is infinitely more important than any arms bill that anypne is talking about. Norway itself, for example, will never be strong enough to defend itself against Russia. But the United States, as the central power of the Atlantic Alliance, can be strong enough to deter Russia from attacking Norway.

The true measure of the value of the Pact is the whole power of the United States, Canada, Britain, and France, which, when mobilized, may be of an order of magnitude of over 100 billions a year. An arms bill for a mere one billion a year is not, and should never be regarded, as a measure of the value of the Pact.

Yet there is a disappointing disposition in many quarters abroad to discount the importance of the American guarantee and to exaggerate the notion of America as a source of supplies.

THEN ALSO our European partners should make it their business to understand that a treaty, if it is to be effective for 10 or 20 years, must be a clear engagement. It cannot rest on what a Norwegian Foreign Minister, for example, believes that an American Secretary of State meant when he talked with him during a hurried visit to Washington. For there will be many Foreign Ministers and many Secretaries of State during the life of this treaty. And there will be many Senators who will not remember just what was the delicately devised formula of words that Mr. Vandenberg and Mr. Dulles used in their argument with Mr. Taft on a hot day in July, 1949.

Moreover, our European friends should realize that while the Administration has the votes to beat Mr. Taft, it will be much better for all concerned if he can be won over to the policy itself. For Mr. Taft's objections are not at all those of an irreconcilable isolationist, or of an eccentric riding his own personal hobby. They are the genuine objections of a responsible American legislator who, once he were persuaded to support the policy, would add immensely to its power and its permanence.

Smooth Lobby Job Produces $50 Million Vote for Franco

By Robert S. Allen

A smooth lobbying job by a one-time lobbyist investigator was behind that sudden Senate Appropriations Committee earmarking of $50,000,000 of ECA money for Dictator Franco.

The deft lobbyist is Charles Patrick Clark, who was an attorney on the staff of Senator Harry S. Truman's War Investigating Committee.

Whether President Harry S. Truman knew this when he blasted the proposed Franco grant is conjectural. But his one-time lobby investigator is a registered Franco lobbyist at $50,000 a year.

In his sworn registration statement Clark reported he has a two-year contract with the Franco government for a total of $100,000. His official title is "Special legal counsel to the Division of Cultural Affairs of the Spanish Embassy" in Washington.

The Appropriations Committee's proposal is not final. It still has to run the gantlet of the full Senate, the House, and White House action.

Previously, the Truman Administration had blocked attempts to cut Franco in on ECA funds.

How Clark came to be hired as Franco's lobbyist is obscure. One source credited the deal to Hugh Fulton, chief counsel of the one-time Truman committee. Clark and Fulton are close friends. Recently Fulton represented President-Dictator Juan Peron of Argentina in a transaction. Peron and Franco are buddies.

Potato Price Payments Less, Council Says

The National Potato Council said yesterday the Government this year is spending only one-fifth the amount it did last year to keep potato prices up.

Up to July 14, the council said, the Government had bought 3,215,000 bushels for about 4 million dollars, compared with purchases of 10,700,000 bushels at a cost of $18,500,000 the same time last year.

It said that if the trend continues, cost of the price support program for 1949 will be about 45 million dollars, one-fifth of the 225 million dollars spent last year.

The council said the cut was due to the Government's action in reducing the support price from 90 to 70 per cent, and to the fact that potato farmers cooperated with the Government by planting fewer spuds.

'Miracle' Portrait Cathedral Is Closed

Warsaw, July 17 (AP).—Lublin Cathedral will be closed for several days to discourage the influx of Poles seeking to pray before the "miracle" portrait of the Holy Virgin, the Roman Catholic hierarchy announced today.

The hierarchy earlier announced that investigation proved there was no foundation to stories that tears of blood had been seen in the eyes of the picture and that a number of worshippers had had miraculous cures.

view prepared for the Gannett radio stations.

Nourse advised both business and consumers to "shop around but have willingness to spend as values are offered."

He called the business recession a case of "disinflation," rather than a depression.

"I think it is clear that the adjustment of prices has been well begun and is moving in an orderly fashion," Nourse said. "It strikes first at basic prices and is relatively slow in filtering through to the consumer level."

From here on, he predicted, "we will see the thing more comparably reflected in the decline of the cost of living, which will be a boon to the average family."

Nourse forecast "a sizable, but not unbridled, deficit during the next year or two while we're getting back to full production and to a situation where we can reduce military and foreign aid measures."

In an interview, Senator George (D., Ga.), who heads the Senate Finance Committee, denounced the idea of red-ink spending as a "disastrous course" and called on Congress to balance the budget. He said Congress must take over the financial front.

Senator O'Mahoney, also a member of the Senate Appropriation Committee, said he doesn't think Congress can cut much off the spending total. He contended that only about $9,900,000,000 of the President's 42-billion-dollar budget goes for normal Government operations outside of defense, international payments, veterans' benefits and interest on the debt.

Mr. Truman has resigned himself to temporary deficit spending, pending an economic upturn. He said a big cut in expenses would hold back recovery.

New Channels to Change Video

By the United Press

Starting perhaps this fall, television owners who want to keep abreast of developments in the rapidly growing industry, may have to buy new sets or "converters" for their present models.

This view is held by the Federal Communications Commission which pointed out yesterday that none of the two-million-odd sets now in use can "tune in" on the new "ultra high" frequency channels or on color broadcasts.

The first "ultra high" broadcasts are expected to start by late fall but color television is at least two and perhaps more years in the future.

The commission last week approved plans for 42 "ultra high" or "UHF" channels to relieve overcrowding on the 12 existing "very high" or "VHF" channels, and expects to authorize broadcasters to start using them by late fall.

The Bureau of Standards meantime announced that a special committee headed by Dr. E. U. Condon, bureau director, has been named to check into the present status and future prospects of color television.

Everything's Happened Now! Nats Lose 2 to Browns

The Washington Post Sports
8 Monday, July 18, 1949 **

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Blue Plate Special

BOBBY LOCKE DEPT.—During his American tours it was clearly established that Locke, the thrifty South African, was a slow guy with a buck, so there may be some initial surprise that he has challenged Henry Cotton to a golf series for an $8000 side bet.

However, it isn't quite what you would call a brash act by calculating Locke. He has just won the British Open and is at the top of his game. Cotton hasn't played in a tournament since he won the same Open last year. Locke suggests that the matches be played in the big British towns of Leeds, Manchester, London, Edinburgh and Birmingham. He figures to win not only any side bet, but harvest even more in gate receipts.

POVICH

DiMAGGIO DEPT.—One of the reasons Joe DiMaggio is drawing nigh onto $100,000 a year from the Yankees while little brother Dominic is working for the Red Sox at a miserly $30,000 a year, is obvious from the latest batting figures.

In his mere 40 times at bat for the Yankees, Joe has driven 16 runs across the plate. Dominic, in 301 trips to the plate, has produced only 36 runs. Even allowing for the fact that Dom is leading off in the Boston lineup while Joe is batting clean-up for the Yankees, the difference in rate of production is still immense.

DISTAFF DEPT.—The pert little nose of the racing mare, Conniver, got her home in front of Palestinian in the $50,000 Butler Handicap at Jamaica on Saturday. And when she won at a $34 mutuel, Jamaica's 31,000 fans suddenly remembered that Conniver was the champion of her sex on the tracks last season.

There were a couple of other sudden memories for the customers, too. They remembered too late, after establishing Palestinian as a 3-to-2 favorite, that it was his first test against older horses. And that along about July, fillies and mares are in better racing fettle than in the spring when they are often too romantically inclined.

McAFEE DEPT.—It must have been the lure of his $15,000 salary, not the prospect of running wild again in the National Football League, that brought George McAfee out of his college coaching job for another fling with the Chicago Bears.

There never was a better running back in pro football than the swift, elusive McAfee, who could crash a tackle or drift the ends better than any other man of his time. But a couple of years ago it was apparent that he had slowed, and last season with the Bears he was just another guy in their backfield, no longer commanding special defenses.

UMPIRES DEPT.—There is some merit in Baseball Commissioner Chandler's effort to lift control of the major league umpires from the hands of the two league presidents, but not much. Chandler's idea is that his office should take over the umpires, and rotate them in both leagues, doing away with separate staffs.

That would bring more uniformity of umpiring. Complaints are heard now of "National League strikes," in which umpires give the pitchers the benefit of low pitches that are called balls in the American League. But major league baseball already has enough of rote, and smugness. The different styles of umpiring help to distinguish the two leagues. It's part of the rivalry that helps to build up the World Series. Too much sameness in baseball would make it more dull.

DUST-OFF DEPT.—George Kell, the Tigers' .345-hitting third baseman, brings up again the subject of dust-off pitching, but like most hitters he doesn't register much indignation. He admits its part of the pitching business to keep the hitters from crowding the plate, even at the risk of nicking 'em.

"Every time I hit the dirt after a close pitch, I get up just more determined to make Mr. Pitcher repent by socking a solid line drive," says Kell.

If Kell's hits happen often enough after he is knocked down, he will have little to fear from dust-off pitches. The pitchers will lay off him like they used to lay off Babe Ruth and Ty Cobb, and like they have respect now for such as Joe DiMaggio and Ted Williams. They know those guys as more dangerous when they are roiled, and they prefer to stay at least half-friendly.

VEECK DEPT.—There never has been any question that young Bill Veeck is the top promotional genius in the major leagues, with his ability to coax more than 2,200,000 fans out to the Indians' home games last season. And he didn't disturb his top rating as a good-will, public relations man the other day when he paid over $8000 to a community fund.

Veeck took that action because the Indians-Pirates exhibition game drew only 33,000 fans, not the 40,000 that were expected, because of the absence of the Pirates' home-run heroes, Kiner and Restelli. And I recall earlier in the season that when a Washington-Cleveland game drew only 8000 fans because of cold, windy weather, Veeck in midgame announced: "You loyal fans who came out here in the cold today, can turn in your ticket stubs for any game in the future."

BERRA DOESN'T MAKE IT—Catcher Yogi Berra (8) of the New York Yankees, is forced at second as Chicago White Sox Second Baseman Cass Michaels gets off throw to first in attempt to catch Dick Kryhoski, Yanks' first sacker. Play came in second inning of Yanks-Chisox first game when Kryhoski tapped one to Shortstop Luke Appling. Michaels' throw to first was too late to complete attempted double play. The Yanks won, 2-1, but lost the second game, 7-3

St. Louis Uses 25 Hits, 20 Walks, Four Griff Errors to Win, 15-8, 7-4

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

St. Louis, July 17.—Having abandoned all hopes of catching the league-leading Yankees, the sixth-place Nats are now apparently trying to dislodge the cellar-dwelling St. Louis Browns.

If this be their goal, they made excellent progress in that direction today, losing a double-header to the tail-enders, 15 to 8 and 7 to 4. All told the Browns scored 22 runs on 25 hits, 20 walks and 4 Nats errors.

It was the first double-header the Browns have won this year and it was obvious to the 4947 patrons that the reason they haven't had any more success in winning twin bills is that they hadn't met up with the Nats twice in one day before this afternoon.

Before relieving the Browns of eighth place the Nats must oust the White Sox from seventh and they had good luck in that infamous ambition, too. They're now only half a game ahead of the Chicagoans since the Hose split with the Yankees while the Nats were being crocked by the Browns twice.

That 15-8 game provided relief Pitcher Tom Ferrick with his fourth success and the former Nat has yet to be beaten this season.

He was artfully supported by 16 Brownie base hits and 13 walks off four would-be Washington pitchers. Eddie Yost walloped his seventh homer and Al Evans his second for the Nats in the carnage, while Gerry Priddy thumped No. 7 and Jack Graham clouted his sixteenth for the winners.

The Browns also threw four doubles into their assault with Ferrick's two-run two-base knock in the third giving the Browns a lead they not only kept, but built up to staggering proportions as the one-sided battle raged.

Paul Calvert, who hasn't won a game in six weeks, had a 3-2 edge over Cliff Fannin entering the last half of the seventh inning of the nightcap, but when it was over the Browns had two runs and Calvert his eighth licking.

In the eighth, the Browns made merry at the expense of Sid Hudson and the Nat defense, pouring over three runs on three of their nine hits and three of four Nat errors to salt away the decision.

Kokos' Homer Ties It Up

After the Nats had forged ahead, 3 to 2, in the seventh, Kokos lashed out his seventeenth homer to tie it in the seventh, but the Browns didn't stop there. Whitey Platt's single and Roy Sievers' line drive to left, which Gil Coan tried and failed to make a shoestring catch of, went for a double, busted up the stalemate.

That made it 4 to 3, and it remained that way only until the eighth, when three singles and errors by Sam Dente, Hudson and Yost added up to a 7-3 lead.

Eddie Robinson, who got three hits in each game, singled in Buddy Lewis, who had doubled, with the fourth Nats' run in the ninth, and Yost cracked out a single, the thirteenth Nat hit, with two away.

Needing a home run to prolong the agony, the Nats came within two feet of deadlocking the game when Dente sent Platt up against the left-field wall to haul down his long fly and wind the six-hour losing proposition.

Amazing as it may seem in the light of final developments, the Nats led the Brownies twice in

Yanks Win 1st, 2-1, Lose Second, 7-3

Chicago, July 17 (AP).—The New York Yankees retained their 5½ game American League lead by splitting a doubleheader with the Chicago White Sox before 41,727 persons today.

Joe Dimaggio's No. 6 homer gave Vic Raschi his fourteenth victory via a 2-1 score in the opener.

The White Sox won the second game, 7-3, pounding starter Fred Sanford and Frank Shea for 14 hits.

DiMaggio was the difference in the opener as both Raschi and Randy Gumpert pitched the distance for the thirteenth time this season. Each pitcher allowed six hits as Gumpert suffered his eighth loss.

DiMaggio singled to open the second, surviving on a pop fly that fell between Luke Appling and Herb Adams. Joe completed the journey on Larry Berra's single and Billy Johnson's fly.

Eddie Malone, new White Sox catcher up from Los Angeles, got the third Chicago single of the inning to score George Metkovich with the tying run in the fourth.

Then DiMaggio opened the seventh with his home, a drive into the lower left field pavilion.

In the second game Sanford owned a 1-0 lead when Chicago scored twice in the fourth on singles by Joe Tipton and Adams.

'Hot Rod' Driver Dies Of Crash Injuries

Davenport, Iowa, July 17 (AP).—John Fitzgibbons, 24, of Davenport, was killed in the featured "hot rod" race today at a new track west of Davenport.

The driver was fatally injured when the racing cars bunched on a turn in the first lap of the race and his auto was forced to the side, where it struck a pole. He died shortly afterward in Davenport Hospital.

Olmo's Homer In 9th Wins For Bums, 4-3

Brooklyn, July 17 (AP).—Luis Olmo, Mexican League refugee, homered in the ninth inning today to give Brooklyn Dodgers at 4-3 triumph over the Chicago Cubs in the first game of a scheduled double-header. The second game was postponed because of rain in the second inning.

Olmo led off the ninth with his first homer of the season. The blow, off Johnny Schmitz, snappd a 3-3 stalemate and enabled the Brooks to maintain their 1½-game National League lead over the runner-up St. Louis Cardinals. The Cards trounced the New York Giants, 10-1.

Schmitz had the Dodgers licked, 3-0, on two hits going into the eighth inning when he lost his touch. Tommy Brown singled to start the frame. One out later Pinch-hitter Roy Campanella blasted his thirteenth homer to cut the Cubs' advantage to 3-2. Emil Verban then booted Pee Wee Reese's grounder and the Dodgers pounced on the break and tied up the game. Billy Cox followed with a single to send Reese to third from where he scored on Carl Furillo's bounce out.

The Cubs scored twice against Erv Palica in the third, largely due to Olmo's mishandling of two flies on the rain-drenched outfield. It was Palica's first start. Verban led with a single that dropped in front of Olmo. After Schmitz sacrificed, Olmo slipped going after Frank Baumholtz's long fly and it fell for a triple. Phil Cavaretta's single scored Baumholtz.

In the fourth Hank Sauer hit his sixteenth homer and twelfth as a Cub.

Wynn's Homer Ends 1st, 4-2; Stephens' Clout Wins 2d, 2-1

Cleveland, July 17 (AP).—A ninth-inning home run by Vernon (junior) Stephens broke a 1-1 tie as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Cleveland Indians 2-1 in the second game of a double header today before 73,599 fans.

A home run by Cleveland pitcher Early Wynn in the eighth inning enabled the Tribe to win the opener 4-2. Red. Sox Rookie Chuck Stobbs gave the tribe four hits and struck out nine in the nightcpa.

Stephens was practically the whole offensive show for the Bosox in the twin bill. He hit his twenty-second home run in the fourth inning of the first game to drive in both Boston runs.

Along with his twenty-third homer in the nightcap, the Boston slugger rapped a single to score Johnny Pesky with the tying run in the sixth inning.

The Tribe opened the second game with a run in the first off

Campbell's Homer, Single Aid Tigers To 8-0, 5-4 Wins

Detroit, July 17 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers swept a double-header with the Philadelphia Athletics today. Paul Campbell's eleventh-inning single winning the nightcap, 5 to 4, after Ted Gray had pitched an 8-to-0 victory in the opener.

The Tigers had things their own way in the first game but had to come from behind to take the afterpiece.

Campbell's single to right scored Houtteman with the winning run and sent the crowd of 32,427 home happy.

The Athletics went ahead on Sam Chapman's fourteenth homer in the third with Eddie Joose aboard and pushed over two more runs in the next frame on a walk, a double

Cards Wallop Giants, 10-1

New York, July 15 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals walloped a trio of New York Giant pitchers for 13 hits, including home runs by Red Schoendienst and Eddie Kazak, to take the opener of a Sunday twin bill, 10 to 1, before 22,128 fans today.

The second game was called because of rain with the Giants at bat in the second and trailing, 2-0.

The Cards belted David Koslo for five runs in the first two innings and added two more tallies on homers by Schoendienst and Kazak off Kirby Higbe. Red Webb, who finished up, was reached for the final three St. Louis runs.

Dapper Dan Halted by Rain; Snead Leader

Pittsburgh, July 17 (AP).—Heavy incessant rains today washed out the final day of play in the $16,500 Dapper Dan golf tournament at Aleoma Country Club.

The tourney will be completed Monday. Play gets under way at 9:30 (Eastern standard time).

Slammin' Sammy Snead, the White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., pro, was almost certain to bag the $2600 first prize. His five-stroke lead at 203 for the 54 holes appeared insurmountable.

His nearest rival, Lloyd Mangrum of Chicago, had a three-day total of 208.

Bob Hamilton, of Landover, Md., Pa., for third with a total of 209, appears the man most likely to succeed in the tournament's big side issue—a berth on the United States Ryder Cup team.

These selections are made in a point system—based on competitive excellence in tournament play. Before this tournament began, Vic Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J. and Hamilton were among those deemed most likely to grab a cup spot.

Ghezzi, last year's Dapper Dan champ, currently is far back in this year's field. So far, he has failed to make the top 20. This virtually eliminates his Ryder Cup bid.

Dr. Cary Middlecoff, the Memphis dentist, Dick Metz, of Virginia Beach, Va., Herman Barron, White Plains, N. Y., Buck White, Greenwood, Miss., and Otto Greiner. Baltimore, are in a five-way tie for fourth with 210.

Overton Wins, Ties Record

Chestertown, Md., July 17 (AP).—Spencer Overton of the Rolling Road Country Club tied the course record with a 69 again today to win the Eastern Shore Handicap Golf Tournament at the Chester River Yacht and Country Club.

The Baltimore shotmaker's round coupled with the 69 he fashioned yesterday, gave him 138 for the 18-hole competition sponsored by the Maryland State Golf Association.

C. B. Oler of Annapolis followed Overton with 76, 73—149.

Marshall, Ring Deny Negotiating For Nats' Stock

Denials last night followed the statement by a national networks radio commentator that George Preston Marshall and Gustave Ring of Washington are negotiating for the purchase of the controlling interest in the Washington Baseball Club.

Club President Griffith said: "I know nothing about it."

Marshall, president of the Washington Redskins, said: "I am not interested."

Ring, prominent realtor, said: "Nothing to it."

Those Wondrous Nats

No need to get panicky just because we dropped a double-header, 15-8 and 7-4, to the Browns in St. Louis yesterday.

It was bound to happen sooner or later. Law of averages, you know. After all, we were undefeated in St. Louis until yesterday.

If the critics want to say we hit rock bottom, that's O.K. But we're still in sixth place, and they said, before the season, that we'd finish seventh at best.

With the first half of the season over, it is possible now to show them also that we're quite a bit improved over last year, when we won only 56 games and hit only 31 home runs. We can figure out approximately what we will have accomplished by the end of the year simply by doubling our accomplishments over the first 77 games.

We figure to win 68 games and hit exactly 100 homers, the later an all-time club record. Ray Scarborough will win 14 games. Paul Calvert, hired as a relief pitcher, will win 12. Clyde Vollmer and Eddie Robinson will each hit 22 homers, tying the team record, and Clyde will knock in 94 runs.

And Dick Welteroth will set another team record for relief pitchers by appearing in 62 games.

We should even improve on those figures because we've had the wrong end of every bad bounce so far. But we're still fighting, even in defeat.

Take yesterday's first game for instance. We went into the eighth inning trailing 15 to 6, when Eddie Yost cracked out a two-run homer and we gave the Browns an awful scare.

That Yost is still swatting, isn't he? A homer, double and single yesterday. And Robinson's liners are starting to drop safely again. Six hits for him. We'll come back yet.

Women's Crown Won By Rurac

Chicago, July 17 .—Richard (Pancho) Gonzales and Mrs. Magda Rurac, both of Los Angeles, retained their National Clay Courts Tennis titles today.

Gonzales won his by defeating his Los Angeles rival, Veteran Frankie Parker, 6—1, 3—6, 8—6, 6—3. Mrs. Rurac, formerly of Bucharest, Romania, wore down 19-year-old Beverly Baker of Santa Monica, Calif. 2—6, 9—7, 6—3.

The top-seeded team of Vic Seixas of Philadelphia and Sam Match of Los Angeles captured the men's doubles crown by outlasting Gonzales and Hugh Stewart of Pasadena, Calif., 6—4, 1—6, 5—7, 6—6, 9—7. Match don the doubles title last year with Tom Chambers.

Both contestants in the women's finals were near exhaustion after playing nearly three hours under a broiling sun. Mrs. Rurac went to the sidelines in the last set to have a cramp massaged out of her leg while Miss Baker retired momentarily to have one rubbed out of her arm.

Miss Baker twice had match points in the second set before her steady-playing foe ran out 9-7. Miss Baker, tiring noticeably, had trouble with her net play. Many of her sizzling returns failed to clear.

It took the top seeded defending champion Gonzales 1 hour and 45 minutes to turn back Parker, a five-time winner of the tourney, while a capacity crowd of 3500 watched at the River Forest Tennis lub. C

The more cautious Parker was unable to cope with Gonzales' blazing serves, as Pancho pumped across 15 aces to only 3 by Parker.

In points, Gonzales outscored Parker 145 to 130.

The hardest fought set between the two players, who recently teamed to win the Wimbledon doubles championship, was the 40-minute third session in which Gonzales outscored Parked, 54 to 50, to points and rallied after trailing three games to two.

In the third set, Gonzales' sizzling service was at its best. He uncorked seven of his aces and took four of the six deuce games in the 14-game set.

Most of Parker's games came on careless play by the rangy Pancho, rather than any brilliant maneuvering by the methodical Parker.

Pirates Beat Phils, 2 to 1

Philadelphia, July 17 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates won a 2 to 1 victory over the Philadelphia Phils today in an abbreviated first game of a scheduled doubleheader called at the end of five innings. The second game was postponed because of rain.

Buc pitcher Cliff Chambers and Phil hurler Russ Meyer each batted out a triple. Andy Seminick homered for the Phils' only run.

Chambers held the Phils to four hits.

Tigers Trounce A's Twice As Campbell Stars, 8-0, 5-4

by Nelson Fox, an error and a wild pitch.

The Tigers got three of those runs back in the sixth on Campbell's double and singles by Pat Mullin, Vic. Wertz and George Kell. They caught up in the seventh, getting a single tally on Don Kolloway's single, Campbell's double and a wild pitch by Bob Shantz who had replaced Starter Joe Coleman after Campbell's two-bagger.

Two homers and Gray's three-hit hurling were all the Tigers needed in the opener. Hank Majesti's double was the only extra base off the Tiger lefthander.

Campbell's grand slam homer in the second got the Tigers off to a flying start. Robinson walked to open the inning and Lipton followed with a single. Another pass, this time to Neil Barry, sent Carl Schied, the A's starter, to the showers, and Charley Harris relieved him.

Gray was safe at first when Robinson was forced at the plate and Campbell's smash followed.

That was all the scoring until the seventh. In that frame Pat Mullin walked and was sacrificed to second by Dick Wakefield. Wertz was given an intentional pass and Robinson brought both runners in with his round tripper.

Detroit pushed over another run on singles by Gray, Campbell and Mullin in the eighth.

Gray was liberal with walks, issuing nine, but the A's couldn't take advantage of his generosity. He struck out eight in registering his fifth triumph against six defeats.

Virgil (Fire) Trucks got credit for the triumph in the second contest, his eleventh against six losses.

WHERE'S HIS OTHER LEG?—Prince A. F. Adedoyin actually has two legs but the angle at which this picture was taken would hint otherwise. The prince, a member of a Nigerian tribe studying law at Queens University, Belfast, North Ireland, created the missing member mystery as he cleared the high jump bar at 6 feet during the qualifying round of the Amateur Athletic Association challenge cup track meet, at White City, London the 20-year-old Stobbs, but they scored no more.

Mitchell tripled and scored on Ray Boone's single. From that point, the youthful lefthander was almost untouchable, allowing only two more hits for the rest of the game.

Mickey Vernon hit a double and single in the opener good for three of the Tribe runs. Until he scored Wynn and Mitchell with his double with two out in the sixth, the Indians had been putty in the hands of Boston's Jack Kramer.

Wynn gave up only six hits in the opener to notch his seventh win against one defeat. Stephens got two of the blows to run his base hit total for the day to five.

Drobny Upset In Net Final

Gstaad, Switzerland, July 17 (AP). Jaroslav Drobny, the man without a country, today won and lost in the finals of the Swiss tennis championships.

The stocky Czech court ace first bowed to Earl Cochell of San Francisco in the singles finale, 3—6, 6—3, 2—6, 6—3, 7—5. Cochell, sixth-ranked player in the United States, played hard and brilliantly to overcome the technical superiority of Drobny, who appeared to be missing more shots than usual.

Then Drobny teamed with his fellow Czech-in-exile, Vladimir Cernik, to down the German doubles combination of Rolf Goepfert and Werner Beuthner, 6—3, 6—0, 6—3.

In the women's singles final, Mrs. Shelia Summers of South Africa defeated Joan Curry of London, 6—3, 6—3.

Richmond Boatman Wins Top Honors at Solomons Regatta

By Happy Walker

Solomons, Md., July 17.—Jerry Powell, Richmond, Va. grocery chain executive, won top honors here today as the ninth annual Solomons Insland Yacht Club regatta concluded its two-day program.

Powell took first place in both the 135-cubic inch and 225-cubic inch hydroplane classes, duplicating the feat he performed at the Colonial Beach, Va., regatta last week.

Powell was extended in the 225-cubic inch class by C. A. Widenhouse of Concord, N. C., in his Lazy Day. Powell finally won in his Skedaddle after the lead changed hands several times. Powell won easily in the 135-cubic inch class.

Aubrey Thacker, Washington real estate broker and his brother, Joe, finally shook off their nonfinishing jinx, winning the D service runabout event hands down. The Thacker duo has been burning the midnight oil, attempting to iron out the bugs in their sleek Jezebel VI. It paid off today.

In the D and E racing runabouts, Sanza Frank Foulcke, Essex, Md., put his Sauanna VIII over the triangular course in "Mill Creek" for two wins and 800 points. Edward Alekanronwicz, Baltimore, Key Wallis, Cambridge, Md., and Frank Thompson, Baltimore, finished in that order.

St. Mary's Yacht Club sailing men made it a banner dya by taking five of the nine honors in the three class sailing events included in the regatta schedule which took place this morning in Outerport. Lug Cronin was the sailing chairman.

Observed on the Coast Guard cutter, Marion, were Congressman and Mrs. Lansdall Sasser, Dr. and Mrs. Ridwine, all of Washington.

Gov. Preston Lane of Maryland presided at the trophy presentation winding up the two day elaborate progrem.

NATS—From Page 8

Griffs Lose Pair To Browns, 15-8, 7-4

the thing that passed as the first game.

They routed left-hander Bill Kennedy in the first inning to present starter Joe Haynes with a 4-0 lead. Haynes held this cushion only for an inning. Three second-inning singles worked in nicely between three Haynes walks made it a 4-4 ball game.

But the Nats overcame that adversity as Evans swatted a two-run homer off Ferrick in the third to give Haynes a 6-4 lead. But did he hold it? Not by a long shot, fellow sufferers.

He pitched the Brownies into a 7-6 advantage in the third inning and also pitched himself right out of the ball game. And it was Ferrick himself who delivered the blow—a two-run double—that shot the Browns into command for keeps.

As wretched as Haynes' performance was, he wasn't charged with the defeat. He allowed six runs in 2 1-3 innings, but Al Gettel, who gave up two runs in 1 1/3 innings, was the personal victim of the shellacking, his first since joining the club and his sixth of the year.

In justice to Gettel, he shouldn't have been the lone victim. Haynes, Dick Welteroth and Dick Weik should, if rules allowed, also should be charged with some of the misfortune. One was as bad as the other.

Welteroth got caught in the middle of the six-run Brownie fifth. Four Browns had already scored when the high command decreed it wasn't Welteroth's day and Weik was led in. He was greeted by Graham's sixteenth homer, and enough of an assortment of doubles, walks and singles to raise the score to 14-6.

On courage alone, Weik lasted the rest of the way and yielded only one more run. Brave boy. His reward was Yost's two-run homer in the eighth, a comeback that left the Nats only seven runs behind.

IN SHORT—Brownie Manager Zach Taylor is either respectful of the Nats' power or distrustful of his pitching. Even when Tom Ferrick held a 14-6 lead, he had two hurlers warming up when the Nats had runners on first and second with two away in the seventh. They weren't needed . . . Today's Nat hurlers were guilty of everything except good performances. There were bases on balls (by all of 'em), wild pitches (by Calvert) and balks (by Weik) . . . Although he hit a double and a single in his first two times at bat against left and right handed pitching, Kozar was removed for Robertson when Ferrick came in to hurl in the opener . . . The Nats have now lost 17 out of the last 22. They won't get a chance to add to that record tomorrow because they're idle, resuming action Tuesday night against Detroit . . .

Official of VA To Leave Post For Ministry

A 39-year-old combat veteran of World War II last night announced he was quitting one of the biggest jobs in government social work to prepare for the Episcopal ministry.

He is Jack H. Stipe, chief of the Social Service Division of the Veterans Administration and boss of 1300 social workers throughout the country.

Stipe will leave his job August 26 to enter General Theological Seminary of the Episcopal Church in New York City.

"More Direct Approach"

He will be succeeded by Roger J. O. Cumming, a Navy veteran, former probation officer for the District Juvenile Court and for many years a Minneapolis social worker.

Stipe, a bachelor who lives at 3307 R st. nw., said yesterday his decision was not a sudden one. "I have been active in the Episcopal Church since 1932, as a lay reader, vestryman, parish clerk and other positions."

"I don't feel that I am giving up social work, just changing to a closer and more direct approach," he said, "and my experience as a social worker should be easily applied in the church."

Stipe said he had an open mind about his future, hoping his comparatively advanced age would provide no barrier. He said he might end up in the department of social work of an Episcopal diocese.

Native of Oregon

A native of Oregon and a graduate in 1932 of the State University, Stipe worked as a social worker in Portland and New York until he was drafted. He landed in France in June, 1944, and served as administrative officer of the 7th Army Headquarters. He has been with the VA since his discharge in April, 1946.

Rocket Flight To Moon No Job "For Amateurs"

Chicago, July 17 (U.P.)—R. L. Farnsworth, president of the United States Rocket Society, said today that if anybody makes a trip to the moon, it won't be a group of "amateur dreamers."

Farnsworth scoffed at the claims of the Canadian Rocket Society that "about 1960" it plans a rocket trip to the moon, with possible side excursions to other planets.

"They're a group of amateurs who got wrapped up in their own dreams," Farnsworth said. "We had the same dream at one time."

Only the Government can now afford to think about financing and building a space ship capable of making the trip, he said. The Canadian group has admitted that the ship and incidental expenses for a round-trip to the moon would cost five million dollars, plus additional "hundreds of millions" for research and trials.

Glover, Noyes Named Chest Drive Officials

Appointment of Charles C. Glover 3d as chairman, and Newbold Noyes, jr., as vice chairman of the advance gifts general unit of the Community Chest Federation campaign was announced yesterday.

Glover is an attorney and Noyes is secretary of the Evening Star Newspaper Co.

Frank J. Luchs, general chairman of the campaign, said the two will organize workers for personal calls on individuals who are able to make the most generous subscriptions to the drive for funds for the 101 Red Feather agencies in the greater Washington area.

Glover has served as secretary of United Community Services, Washington member of the Chest Federation, and in last year's campaign was cochairman of residential special gifts.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Glover, jr., he bears the name of his grandfather, a former president of the Riggs National Bank. He is a partner in the law firm of Cox, Langford, Stoddard and Cutler.

Noyes saw newspaper service in Washington before and since World War II, and was a war correspondent for part of the conflict. Earlier, he went overseas with the American Field Service, a volunteer ambulance unit, and served with it in Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Libya and Tripolitania.

Work of the advance gifts general unit, Mr. Luchs said, will begin well in advance of the general campaign.

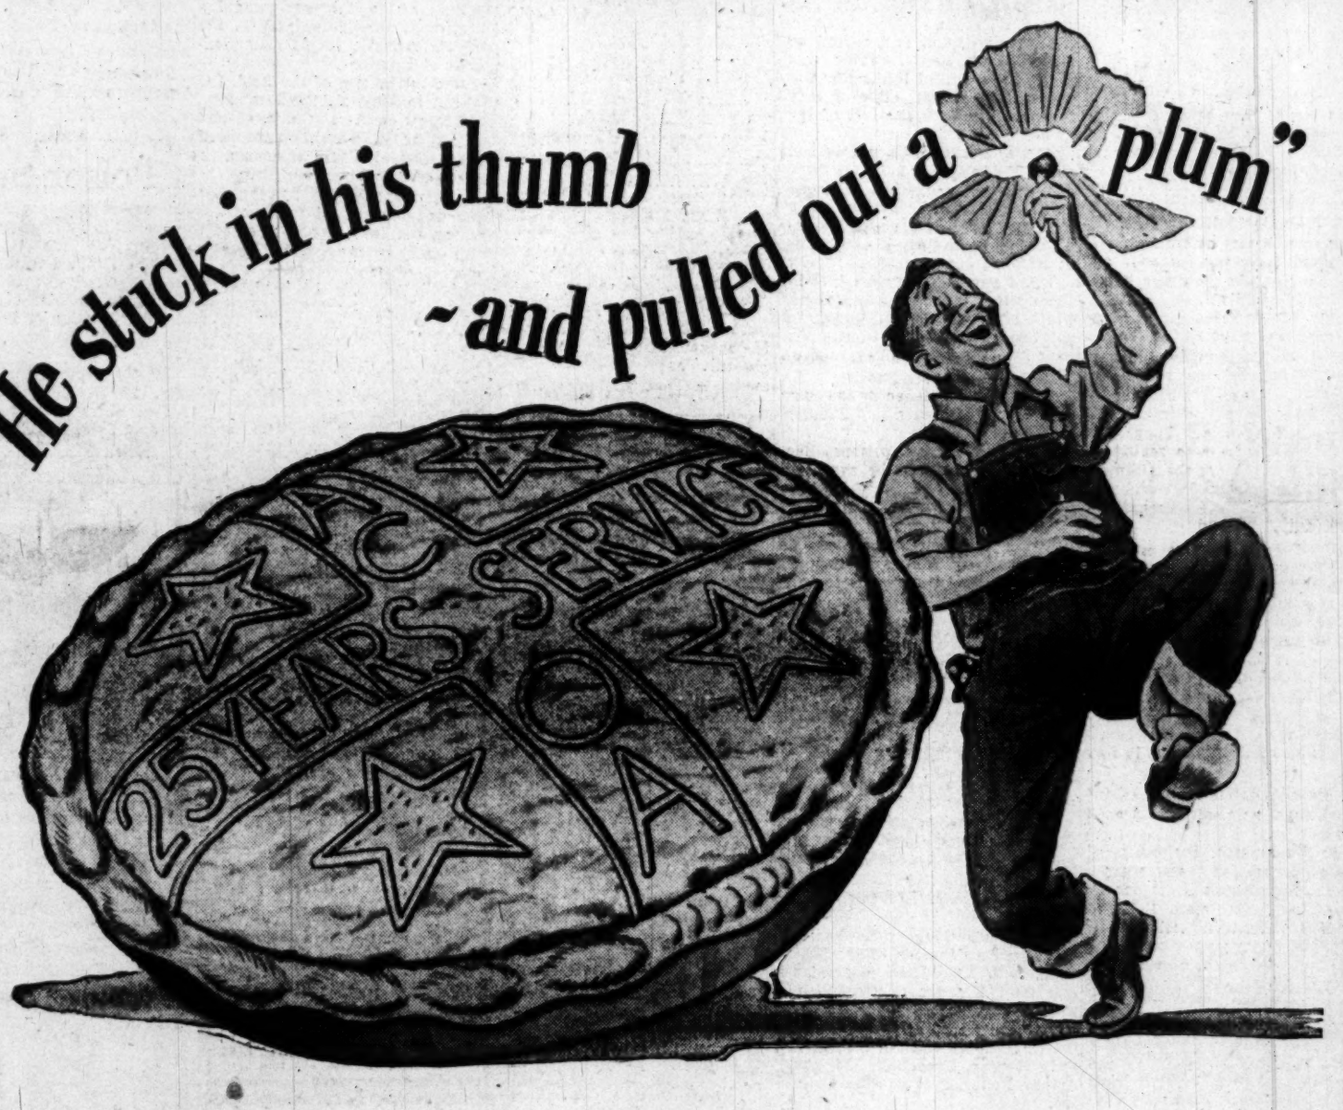
"He stuck in his thumb ~and pulled out a plum"



Alcoa has more good jobs than a plum pie has plums.

The "plums"—the better jobs up the line—are an important reason for working at Alcoa.

Do you know who gets those jobs? Folks just like you. Some day it could be you. Especially if you believe in the right to compete for the job you want, and get out and hustle for it.

We believe that free competition is a mark of a free country. Here at Alcoa you have the right to compete for better jobs just as Alcoa salesmen compete for business with our competitors.

If you show you can assume new responsibilities, you can move up. There's plenty of proof of this in the Alcoa organization.

In the older plants many of the folks, who have the better jobs, wear 25-Year Club buttons. They started down the line just like the rest of us. They liked what they found at Alcoa. They saw opportunities to move up—decided the better jobs were worth going after. They stayed with Alcoa.

So dig right into Alcoa's pie, young fellow. Go after the job "plums" you want.

. . . . While we're talking about plum pies, how would you like a good recipe? If you would like to try it at home, here is how you make a 9-inch pie:

PURPLE PLUM PIE

Flaky pastry
1-1½ cups sugar
4 tablespoons flour
⅛ teaspoon salt
3½ cups pitted, drained, canned purple plums
1 tablespoon butter

1. Line 9-inch pie pan with pastry.
2. Mix sugar, flour, salt together.
3. Pour plums into pastry shell; sprinkle with sugar mixture.
4. Dot with butter; adjust top crust.
5. Brush top crust with cream or egg white.
6. Bake in hot oven (450° F.) 10 minutes, then in moderate oven (350° F.) 30 minutes.

Social Security Bill Would Cover 350,000 In Temporary U. S. Jobs

Upward of 350,000 temporary Federal workers would be covered by the Social Security system under a bill that has the tentative approval of the House Ways and Means Committeee. The measure is scheduled to be reported to the House this week.

These temporary employes are not now covered by the Civil Service system. It would cover the temporary workers under old-age and survivorship and long-term disability features. The workers would be required to pay 1½ per cent of their salaries up to the first $4800 for this protection.

The Administration is supporting the bill, which was introduced by Chairman Doughton (D., N. C.). Employe leaders are split on the proposal.

Harry Dawson, an economist, formerly with the Bureau of Labor Statistics, will conduct the unemployment study for the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report. . . . Sam Brown of Georgetown University will make the study of low-income groups for the committee. . . . The Bureau of Labor Statistics is planning to revise its cost-of-living index. The House already has approved funds to hire about 200 additional employes for the project. . . . The Interstate Commerce Commission is liquidating the Office of Defense Transportation, the last of the war agencies.

HAZARD PAY: The pay-reclassification bill in the Senate Civil Service Committee now carries a provision that would raise the salaries of those employes in hazardous jobs up to 50 per cent.

For a one-year period, it would authorize the Civil Service Commission to fix the higher pay rates for those employes who are in unusual danger of loss of life, crippling injury, or disabling disease.

Meantime, it would require the commission to make a study of Federal jobs and to report to Congress within a year on a definite pay scale for hazardous jobs.

RETIREMENT: The Senate-approved bill to help the families of married men who retire has been blocked, at least temporarily, in the House Civil Service Committee.

The man who retires must take an annuity reduced by 10 per cent to provide a pension for his wife after his death. The Senate approved a bill that would cut the reduction to 5 per cent. The measure is now supported by the Administration.

However, the full House committee sent the bill back to a subcommittee with instructions to reconsider it. Opposition centered on reducing the discount for employes who would get pensions of more than $2400 a year. A compromise may be worked out to retain the 10 per cent for men in the higher pay and annuity brackets.

Incidentally, there is no ceiling on the widow's anuity in the bill. In the case of a long-service employe, his wife would get about half of his annuity on his death.

Another retirement bill also is tempororily stymied. It would give a man already retired the right to keep the increased annuity under last year's liberal retirement act plus survivorship benefits for his wife.

This measure has been objected to when it has been brought up in the Senate on the consent calendar. In the House, the Rules Committee has been asked to clear it. But its members have asked for additional details on its cost.

At Commerce, cash awards for economy suggestions have been given to Walter H. Phillips, Alfreda A. Lapanne, Arville B. Cross, Margaret B. Watson, Novel R. Coleman, Thomas A. Rimmer, Olive Cook, and Y. U. Potter . . . Bernice B. Heffner, AFGE secretary-treasurer, is recovering nicely from an operation in Toledo hospital . . . At the Bureau of Standards, Dr. F. G. Brickwedde, chief of the heat and power division, has applied some of the heat to his professional staff for stopping work promptly at 5 p. m. He says that quitting work on the dot is "characteristic of a factory. It is not professional," he says, "and shows a lack of a university spirit."

Beverly Beach to Washington

Nightmarish 40-Mile Chase to Hail a Taxicab Ends in Crash, Two Broken Ribs, Loss of $50

A high-speed chase from Beverley Beach, Md., to Washington yesterday morning between a Yellow Cab trying to get home and a car trying to hail the cab left the cab wrecked in northeast Washington and its driver in Casualty Hospital with two broken ribs.

For the cabby, Louis J. Remington, 31, the nightmarish ride ended in the 2600 block of Bladensburg rd. ne. when the cab slammed into a tree after careening off a parked car and a street island.

His pursuer, Irving H. Bridgers, 47, had to continue on to the Twelfth Precinct station and forfeit $50 collateral for unreasonable speed.

It all started out as a nice lucrative haul to the beach when Remington, who lives at 5416 Sargent rd., Chillum, Md., was sent at 9 a. m. by the Yellow Cab Co. dispatcher to pick up a passenger at 3359 18th st. nw.

There Remington contracted with Mrs. Irving H. Bridgers to take her to Beverly Beach and back for $12. She wanted to get some business straightened out with her estranged husband, she said.

No sooner had the cabby and Mrs. Bridgers arrived at Beverly Beach, when Mr. Bridgers came running across the street.

"Man, he was mad," Remington related later. "He said, 'What are you doing here? Take her right back to town.'"

LOUIS J. REMINGTON
In hospital

Remington was willing, he said, but Mrs. Bridgers wasn't. Bridgers insisted and put her back into the cab. But his passenger started to fuss, Remington said, and, fearing she might fall out and hurt herself, he let her out down the block.

Thinking Bridgers would come after him, the cabby explained, he poured on the gas. Then, near Largo, Md., Remington said he noted a car he had seen near the cottage.

The cabby called his dispatcher and asked for police. At Largo, his pursuer disappeared, but at Eastern ave., Remington said, "there he was again, flying low."

Meanwhile, Hyattsville police got on the end of the chase. District police were called, but at first mistook the call for a shooting complaint.

But it was soon over. Trying to move around a parked car at South Dakota ave. and Bladensburg rd., Remington hit an island, careened on the wet road into a parked car and spun into a tree. His 1949 cab was demolished.

At the Twelfth Precinct Station, Bridgers told police the only reason he chased the cabby 40 miles was to get him to come back and take Mrs. Bridgers back to Washington.

Helen Davidson, who lives at the 18th st. address, said the Bridgers have been separated for several months. Bridgers runs a stationery and printing house at 810 F st. nw.

Mrs. Davidson told reporters she called to Beverly Beach late yesterday afternoon, to find out about Mrs. Bridgers. Mrs. Bridgers was still there.

Fears Injustice, Delay

Prison Bureau Head Urges Better Counsel for Indigents

Indigent persons accused of crime get effective legal counsel too late if they get it at all, the director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons declared yesterday.

James V. Bennett, the official, made a study of the problem recently and outlined what he thinks is needed. The present procedure, he finds, is apt to breed injustice and unnecessary delays.

Aside from legal advice, there is a deep problem concerning the attitude of police and prosecutors, Bennett wrote recently in the Journal of the American Judicature Society.

"What is needed is broader education of the police and law enforcement agencies. They should somehow be made to realize that convictions are not the all-important question and that upholding the rights of every citizen is their first duty," he said.

Until that problem is solved, Bennett declared, some sort of public defender system is the answer—but most of them do not begin soon enough. Also police investigations should not be hampered, he said.

The prisoner's problems begin from the moment of his arrest and that is often the crucial time, he declared.

Assigning a prison visitor or a representative of the public office to confer with all persons awaiting trial might help solve the problem, he said.

In Washington, the courts will assign counsel on the arraignment of prisoners but it is not done before then. This method, Bennett finds is faulty in several respects.

"First, it doesn't begin soon enough. It is widespread opinion including my own that the case is set and frozen by the time it gets into court. If possible, a man should have an attorney from the moment of arrest to advise him while police are investigating the case, he said.

Bennett acknowledged that he had no completely formulated scheme, but could give only general plans.

The disadvantages now present in handling indigents he said, include:

1. Miscarriages of justice where delicate and intricate problems of confessions and statements against interest are involved.

2. Unnecessary delays where lawyers enter cases late.

3. Counsel assigned by the court are often immature and indifferent.

Even in Federal prisons, Bennett acknowledged, the system is not the best. There is no concerted effort to see that prisoners get lawyers. It would be a good idea if this were otherwise, he said, and an idea that includes educating the prisoners as to their rights and legal needs.

Bennett advocates the passage of a public defender law here which would provide legal counsel paid for by the public to indigent defendants.

In Congress at this time are two public defender bills introduced by Senator Kefauver (D., Tenn.).

Originally, Senator Kefauver hoped to have Washington as the test-center for the public defender plan but received such a cool reception from the District Bar Association that he abandoned this tactic.

Instead he seeks passage of a bill which would empower judges throughout the Nation to appoint public defenders to be paid out of the treasury up to $10,000 a year based upon the service to be performed.

The bills provide the defender be available for all stages of the prosecution. Kefauver saw no reason, why court rules could not permit the public defender to start work on a case as soon as the indigent is arrested.

Despoilers Ruin Gardens In Alexandria

Five times in 10 days tenants of Presidential Gardens and Beverly Plaza in Alexandria have found their community gardens ravaged.

The gardens are in a field behind the Arlandria shopping center. Their destruction has baffled local police, and aroused the conscientious gardeners.

George Dumas, an exporter of 3913 Bruce st., who gave up his vacation because his garden would have gone untended, has lost most of what he planted, tomatoes, beans, onions and okra.

During the recent drought, Dumas rose extra early each morning and carried water 500 yards from his apartment to his vegetables. He made the trip again each night after work. Although most of the gardens were started during the war, this was Dumas' first venture.

The community's biggest garden is worked by Paul Watson, an employe of John Hopkins University research laboratory at Silver Spring. Watson even grew sunflowers for birdseed, and estimates half his summer's work has been destroyed.

More than 80 per cent of the garden of George Gerling, State Deparcment employe, has been ravaged.

The gardeners do not blame children. They say the mystery attacks, the most recent of which occurred Friday, have required some strength. Corn has been hacked as if with a machete. Tomato plants have been severed just above the earth, onions and potatoes thoroughly trampled.

Hearing Set On Limitation Of D. C. Taxis

A bill for limitation of the number of taxicabs in the District will be the subject of a Senate hearing at 2:30 p. m. Tuesday.

The hearing will be in the Senate District Committee room in the Capitol, before a subcommittee headed by Senator J. Allen Frear, jr. (D., Del.).

It will follow a hearing at 2 p. m. before Frear's subcommittee on a bill authorizing the District Commissioners to contract for the removal of sludge, a by-product of the city's sewage treatment plant.

The taxi-limitation plan has been strongly advocated by local taxi firms in recent years, but similar bills have been blocked in previous sessions of Congress.

Also listed for a hearing this week, at 10:30 a. m. Wednesday, is a bill to permit aeronautics students in District schools to receive flight experience. The hearing will be in the Senate District Committee room, before a subcommittee headed by Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.).

Woman's Party Affair

The National Woman's Party will give a garden party at the Alva Belmont House, 144 B st. ne., at 5 p. m. Wednesday to celebrate the 101st anniversary of the formation of a woman's rights platform at Seneca Falls, N. Y.

Dr. Agnes Wells will be the featured speaker.

Howard Gets 4th U. S. Grant For Dentistry

A new grant of $5994 has been awarded Howard University dental school to continue special research in diseases of the gums, it was announced last night.

The award was the fourth and largest grant given by the United States Public Health Service to further the school's research into the relationship of Vitamin C deficiency to gums diseases.

Drs. Raymond L. Hayes, professor of oral medicine, and Walter M. Booker, associate professor of pharmacology, head the study team. Previous grants were $1800, $3400 and $5000.

Earlier this year, the investigators reported their studies showed a strikingly similar pattern between Vitamin C deficiency and diseased gums. They reported difficulty in raising Vitamin C levels in the blood of these patients.

Dr. Booker said last night the new grant would permit the study of human assimilation of the vitamin and perhaps find a way to overcome a deficiency.

The Howard University grant was one of 25 research projects approved by Surgeon General Leonard A. Scheele for support by the National Institute of Dental Research. Total amounts allocated in eight States and the District of Columbia, was $160,708.

Insurance Men Fight Truman Health Plan

An organization of insurance agents yesterday asked President Truman to drop his compulsory health insurance plan and concentrate on improving medical and hospital facilities.

In a letter to Mr. Truman, President Hugh H. Murray of the National Association of Mutual Insurance Agents, said it has become apparent that no "complete health program" can be enacted at this session of Congress.

The President's program, he said, should call for "prompt training of at least 6000 additional doctors" and "a comparable number of dentists and nurses." It also should assure prompt construction of hospitals and provide 900,000 extra beds, he said.

Union Is Told Head Decried Its Demand

Employer Tells D. C. Printers President Scoffed At Wage Request

A Washington printer told members of the Columbia Typographical Union yesterday their own president had called union wage demands "ridiculous."

Appearing as a result of a unique invitation, Walter F. McArdle, chairman of the wage scale committee for some 50 District printing firms, spoke for almost an hour to 300 members of the printers' union at their regular meeting at Pythian Temple.

McArdle said he was received "very coldly," but correctly, at the hall, and got a good hand from union members when he left. Union spokesmen said he was accorded the usual treatment of any nonmember, the members rising to their feet when he came in and also as he left.

There were no demonstrations of either approval or disapproval until the handclapping as he walked out.

McArdle, owner of the McArdle Printing Co., has been seeking for the printing firms a reduction of 36 cents in the present $2.36-an-hour scale paid the commercial printers. The union has asked an increase of 40 cents an hour.

The printing firm owner, who had told James J. O'Connor, local union president, he thought he could convince the rank and file if he talked to them on a face-to-face basis, declared some union members had told him afterward he had accomplished something.

Union spokesmen, however, said he had not proved much of anything and that no one referred to his talk as the regular meeting continued after he left.

McArdle told the meeting he had asked O'Connor how he could justify the 40-cent request, and that O'Connor had said the amount named was "ridiculous" and for bargaining purposes only. He quoted the union president as having said they might as well ask for $200 an hour.

One of the arguments McArdle used was that the higher wage scale for printers here is driving business to Baltimore. The day scale there, he pointed out, is $2 an hour for a 40-hour week. At the Washington scale of $2.36 for a 37½-hour week, printing houses here must pay their printers $99 for 40 hours against $80 in Baltimore, he said.

He referred to the cost of living by stating he had obtained an estimate from a chain store official which, he said, showed the cost of a "family basket" of food had gone down 9.11 per cent between June, 1948, and June, 1949.

While the cost of living has advanced 64.1 per cent since 1940, McArdle told the printers, their wages have increased 100 per cent.

McArdle declared he had asked O'Connor on what basis he could argue for the increase. He said, O'Connor had told him the union in the past had settled on the basis of a show of force and he thought that was the way it would be settled this time.

He accused union negotiators, headed by O'Connor, of "arguing negatively" and merely "poohpoohing" employers' arguments without putting up any of their own.

McArdle was introduced by O'Connor, who told how the invitation was issued. After the talk, McArdle volunteered to answer questions, but O'Connor said he did not think this would be fair, since he faced a "hostile" audience.

One-Man 'Vice Squad' Adds 10 to Score on His 11th Raid

Police Pvt. Wayland H. Fallin is a busy man these weekends. In the past six months his work has led to 11 raids on illegal drinking and gambling places in the Eleventh Precinct, where he is a plainclothesman. Most of the raids are on weekends.

The last one, early yesterday morning, netted eight customers and two alleged proprietors. One week before, while evidence was being obtained for the search warrant used yesterday, one of Fallin's Saturday night raids caught up 14 persons. On March 28, he uncovered and raided the first moonshine still found in the area in 17 years.

Private Fallin said the last raid was at a home at 2017 Savannah pl. se., in a home occupied by Jack and Edna Craven.

The eight customers were seated about a table playing poker, Private Fallin said, with drinks in front of some of them. They scattered to all parts of the house, he said, some hiding in closets.

They were rounded up and boooked at the precinct for disorderly conduct. Each one, Private Fallin said, forfeited $5 collateral on the charges.

Craven was charged with keeping whisky for sale without a license, and with setting up and keeping a gaming table. Mrs. Craven was charged with keeping whisky for sale without a license.

He was released under $2500 bond and she under $500. Both are scheduled to face Municipal Court today on the liquor charges and he also is due to go before the United States Commissioner on the gambling charge.

Popular Tschaikowsky Music Draws Big Watergate Crowd

By Paul Hume

Peter Ilyitch Tschaikowsky has done it again.

Last night a program of his music drew one of the season's largest audiences to the Watergate to hear the National Symphony's summer orchestra under Howard Mitchell. Two soloists were on hand, Carroll Glenn, violinist, and Eugene List, pianist.

It was a night of strange sights and sounds, speaking extra-musically for the moment. During the piano concerto in the second half of the concert, a passing freighter blew its horn. The resulting note created a chord Tschaikowsky never meant. At the same time the barge began to sway back and forth. The rocking motion was accompanied by a gentle sliding from south to north, as if the whole contraption wanted to take off on an excursion of its own.

The sliding around caused some water in a rain-catcher along the top of the barge to fall onto the stage with several loud splats.

None of this visibly disturbed Mr. List, who delivered the piano concerto with aplomb and a good amount of virtuosity. Yet it would be reasonable to suppose that some of his missed notes might have come from the unexpected maneuvers of the barge. The crowd, drawn, no doubt in large part by the popularity of the overworked concerto, rewarded the pianist with demands for an encore.

The encore was Bach's Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring, and the best piece of music on the program. Tschaikowsky must have a direct line to the weather authorities, because in the middle of the Bach a sudden gust of rain fell from an almost cloudless sky. And it fell only in the vicinity of the Watergate. Looks suspicious. As soon as it was announced that the orchestra would play the final number of the evening, Tschikowsky's 1812 Overture, the rain stopped.

Earlier in the concert, Carroll Glenn played the Russian composer's violin concerto. Unhappily the piece is beyond Miss Glenn at present. Intonation, strict tempo, and the technical demands of the saccharine score bothered her in the heavy moments. Quieter passages found her more at ease, though still distorting the rhythm.

Throughout the concert Howard kept the orchestra in fine shape for both soloists, even in the face of problems imposed by the undependable violinist. His account of the opening Marche Slav, and the final overture were crisp and to the point, a mercy in such awful stuff.

Poison Sumac

Poison sumac is as insidious as poison ivy, and must be treated that way.

Contact must be avoided, as well as smoke from burning of the woody plant. The irritant washes off if plenty of soap and water is applied shortly after exposure. Inflammations yield to the same treatments as recommended for ivy poisoning.

Poison sumac is a coarse woody shrub or small tree. Its tapered leaves pair out in series of seven to 13 leaflets, with the odd, single leaflet on the branch's end. White berries distinguish it from harmless sumac, whose berries are red.

Arlington Man Is Drowned In Patuxent

Lawrence L. Smith, 24, 3701 Columbia Pike, Arlington, drowned yesterday in the Patuxent River between Benedict, Md., and Holland Point.

The young man had gone on a fishing trip with three friends, according to Maryland State troopers at the Pikesville station.

They said he went into the river for a swim, and apparently was caught in a strong current, and disappeared.

The body had not been recovered last night.

Jobless Claim Loss, FSA Says

All types of claims for unemployment insurance dropped during the week ending July 9, the Federal Security Agency reported yesterday.

It said the volume of continued claims, indicating the number of persons who have been out of work for at least one week, declined to 1,962,448. This was a drop of 89,573. Initial claims, indicating new unemployment, dropped from 337,419 to 334,195.

David Feller Named To CIO Legal Post

Baby Girl, Crash Victim, Dies; 6 Hurt In Mishaps

Four Hit Parked Machine; Two Others Sent to Hospital After Skid Into Pole

A 4-month-old girl, identified as Martha Larson, 5404 Middleton la. se., died shortly before midnight last night at Providence Hospital of injuries which police said were received in a traffic accident on May 11.

At the time of the accident, the child was riding in an auto driven by her mother, Mrs. Lee R. Larson, 27. It was in a collision with a truck driven by Hasker Mitchell, 45, 4614 Bass pl. se., according to Prince Georges County police. The collision was on Naylor rd., near Silver Hill, Md.

Mrs. Larson suffered face cuts and two other children, Ronald, 2, suffered a broken leg, and Russell, 4, face cuts. At the time of the accident, Martha was listed as treated for a fractured skull. Police charged Mitchell with reckless driving at the time. He was released on $26.70 collateral.

Four persons were injured last night when the car in which they were riding was in collision with a parked car in the 5000 block of Sheriff rd. nw., according to police.

The four were Edward G. Robinson, 26, 1321 R st. nw., who told officers he is a driver for the Chinese Embassy; Alvin Queen, 45, 1342 W st. nw.; Norman Ranisen, 1364 W st. nw.; and Mary Jackson, 49, of 3 Fort dr. ne.

All were taken to Emergency Hospital for treatment of cuts, bruises and shock. Both autos were extensively damaged, police said.

Auto Skids Into Pole

Two men were in Emergency Hospital yesterday after their car skidded and crashed into a utility pole at Wisconsin ave. and Harrison sts. nw., late Saturday night.

In serious condition with possible head injuries and facial cuts is Harry O'Brien, 41, 2302 41st st. nw.

The operator of the car, Donald Johnston, 28, 5211 Chevy Chase pkwy. nw., was in good condition, after being treated for fractured ribs.

A third passenger, Louis Beauregard, 53, 5407 5th st. nw., was treated for injuries to his right arm and released.

Police Seek Identity Of Crash Victim

Maryland State Police sought last night to establish the identity of one of two men killed in a crash Saturday night at Savage, Md.

The man had been identified tentatively through a social security card as Frank Francis Martins. No other identification was found on him at the Baltimore Morgue where he was taken after his death at St. Agnes Hospital, Baltimore.

The family of Oliver Wendell Holmes, 42, of Savage, Md., driver of the car, who also was killed, reported Martins was unknown to them. Police said it is possible that the man was a hitchhiker.

Pictures in a wallet indicate he was a former Marine. Fingerprints will be sent to the FBI today in an effort to establish identity.

Holmes was killed almost instantly when the car he was driving collided with a Good Humor Ice Cream Co. of Baltimore tractor trailer as he attempted to make a left turn into the Savage crossing. He was a truck driver for W. T. Cowan, Inc. of Washington and is survived by a wife and two children.

Charges of manslaughter by auto and reckless driving by colliding against Edward L. Jackson of Baltimore, driver of the truck, will be presented to the Howard County grand jury today at Ellicott City. Jackson is at liberty on $2500 bond pending the hearing.

County School Board Offers Aid to Critics

While we know that many of the members of your board disagree with some of the policies of the school board, we trust that you will use our public and official records for factual information and will not repeat or publicize rumors that have no factual basis."

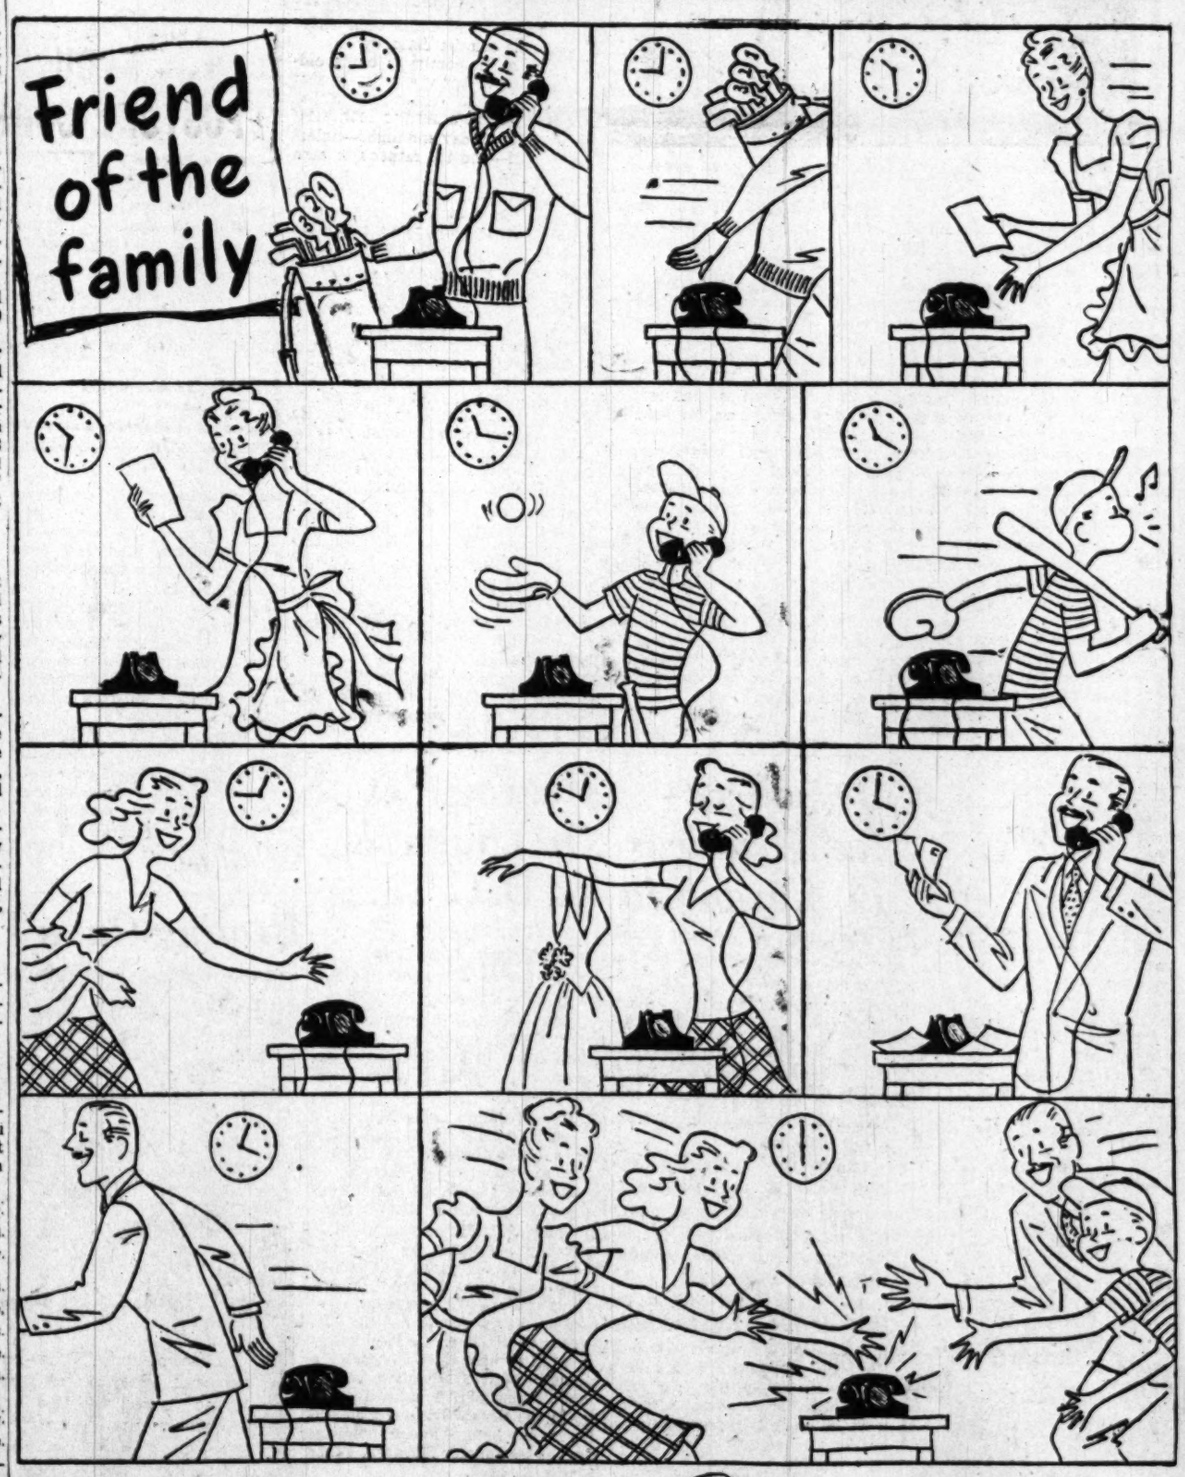
In Memoriam

A booklet of 101 "In Memoriam" tributes suitable for publication is now available without charge. Remembrances for all members of the family and for friends are included. The booklet may be obtained at the front counter in the Post building, by telephoning your request, or by writing to the Washington Post Classified Advertising Department, Washington 4, D. C.



It's Dad's day off. Mom is busy running the home. Sonny and Sis have plans of their own. But the telephone serves them all.

Did you ever stop to think how many different jobs your telephone does? It makes appointments. Runs errands. Helps with the shopping. Stands guard over the home and brings help in emergencies. It keeps you in touch with friends and relatives—in and out of town. Keeps them in touch with you. And all at surprisingly little cost per day. No wonder so many folks say telephone service is one of the biggest bargains they buy.

Father of the Bride

—And the Seven Bridesmaids Too!

Since being the father of the bride unnerves the bravest of men, let your heart go out to Raymond Wiegand who was not only the father of the bride when daughter Raymona, was married to Robert Lemond May 28, but father of all feminine members of the bridal party as well.

The bedlam common to all households about to give up a daughter was multiplied seven times in the home of Raymond Wiegand. The prospective bride had seven sisters to aid and abet her in hysterics, squeals of delight and prenuptial nerves.

"I had to get down on my hands and knees and crawl on the floor to get to my closet the last week before the wedding," reminisces Mr. W. His room was naturally chosen as the logical place to hang one billowing organdy bride's dress (white), one billowing organdy matron of honor's dress (orchid) and six billowing organdy bridesmaid's dresses (yellow), with eight beruffled petticoats to match.

All the fluffy ruffles for the bride and her seven sisters were put together in less than a month by Mrs. Wiegand—"who should get all the credit for the wedding"—and daughter Lois.

Mr. Wiegand took no part in the wedding finery problem. "They knew better than to ask me about the dresses," he said. But he has noticed that every dress they've made since the wedding sports a purple bow to use up the ribbon on which they overcalculated.

THREE days before the wedding, Raymona discovered that there was another wedding scheduled at the same time as hers at the church. Raymona went to pieces.

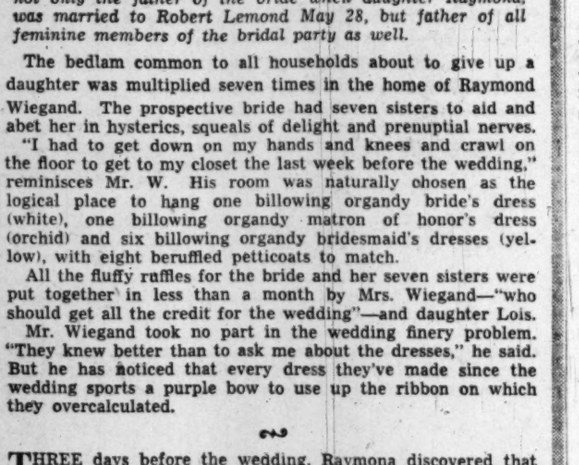
Consoling his pretty 21-year-old daughter that "we'll fix it some way," Mr. Wiegand surveyed the six doleful bridesmaids-to-be and said, "The next one of you go ahead and elope."

Eventually all was straightened out. And it even turned out there was an advantage to the fact that the church was busy with brides that day—the girls all chipped in together to buy flowers for the church. With the whole bridal party to pay bills for, and a limited income as a patternmaker in the Navy, Papa Wiegand thought it was a very fine idea.

After the reception, the depleted family returned home—with 20 relatives who'd come from Dayton for the wedding and stayed for the weekend. Mr. Wiegand doesn't pretend to remember where they housed them all.

"They all ate here," he said, looking at his wife who did the coooking. "But, anyway, it saved us from missing Raymona too much."

MR. WIEGAND had been through all of this wedding business once before. Daughter Louise was married during the war to William Hite. For that wedding he'd been talked



With his eyes tight shut, Raymond Wiegand escorts his daughter, Raymona, to the altar. Maybe it's the best way at that. He's really blinking back a tear—something most fathers do in spite of all their huffing and puffing into wearing "a monkey suit." For this wedding he absolutely refused. So the male members of the wedding party wore white jackets and black trousers.

LOOKING with consternation at the six remaining prospective brides in his family, Mr. Wiegand is consoled by the fact that every time he escorts a daughhter up the aisle he helps build the baseball team he told his wife he wanted o raise when they were first married. The girls always played baseball and basketball; and he even taught his eight brown-eyed blonds to "tumble" so well they became known as "The Tumbling Wiegands" and were tops in popularity with veterans hospitals, clubs and newspaper photographers.

But now there are male athletes of star caliber in the family. The first son-in-law, Bill Hite, played on a service team during the war in company with big-league players.

The newly acquired son-in-law, Bob Lemon, is a star basketball and baseball player at American University.

With two men on the team, Mr. Wiegand now looks to Lois, 23; Marylin, 22; Barbara, 18; Joan, 16; Mary, 15 and Maredith, 11, to bring in the rest of the team. Chances are good, since three of the girls are already dating baseball players. But one daughter says she'll never get married. She just wants to stay home and inherit all the closets.

Father of the Bride

The First Meeting With the In-Laws—Fairview Manor Sizes Up East Smithfield

This is the second of 14 installments of that popular saga of the forgotten man, "Father of the Bride." This condensed version of Edward Streeter's novel chronicles the story of Mr. Stanley Banks as he watches the rise of the greatest show on earth (his daughter's wedding) and the fall of his bank account.

By Edward Streeter

Illustrated by Gluyas Williams

BUCKLEY, Kay informed her parents with her best Old School irony, also had a father and mother. It seemed to her that the situation called for a minimum display of interest from the Banks family unless, of course, they preferred to make it look like a shotgun wedding and introduce themselves at the altar rail.

Mr. Banks agreed moodily. "I suppose Kay's right," he admitted gloomily to Mrs. Banks. "We've got to face it."

"I don't understand why you get in such a lather about it," she said. "What's so awful about meeting Buckley's father and mother?"

"Who said I was in a lather?" he retorted sharply. "All I mean is you'd think Kay might have picked out somebody we knew instead of a family we never laid eyes on and that are probably God-awful. I just know the kind of people they are. It's going to be terrible."

"Stanley Banks, for a grown man you sometimes don't make any sense. In the first place I don't see why you assume the Dunstans are terrible and in the second you're not marrying Buckley's family."

"I might just as well be," groaned Mr. Banks. "I'll probably have to support them."

On a Sunday Morning

THE Dunstans eventually took matters into their own hands and invited Mr. and Mrs. Banks to East Smithfield for Sunday dinner; just the four of them—without Kay and Buckley—so they could get acquainted.

"That's the pay-off," said Mr. Banks. "They're the cozy type."

He made no further comment, but during the intervening days he showed all the symptoms of a debutante about to be introduced at Buckingham Palace.' On Sunday morning he dressed carefully in a sport coat and slacks, then went upstairs after breakfast and changed into a business suit. He insisted on starting half an hour earlier than was necessary—just to allow for a blowout or something. The result was that they arrived in East Smithfield shortly after 12.

Mr. Banks said he'd be damned if he was going to sit and moon at the Dunstans for an hour. He preferred to slum around the town and get a line on the natives.

"I'll bet they won't even have a drink before

The fact that it was about twice the size of his own establishment seemed to add fuel to his agitation dinner," he said gloomily.

"How do you know they won't?"

"Because I know. That's the kind of people they are."

"I think it might be more intelligent to find out where the Dnustans live instead of driving around aimlessly," said Mrs. Banks. "At least we won't end up by being late."

"I'll bet it's a shack," said Mr. Banks.

When they finally located it, the Dunstan shack turned out to be a large, whitewashed brick house about a mile out of town. It sat well back from the road surrounded by old elm trees. The discovery that it was at least twice the size of his own seemed to add fuel to Mr. Banks' agitation. He looked at his watch.

"I'm going back to that hotel we passed and wash up," he announced.

When they drew up in front of the hotel he did not suggest that she get out, but hurried through the revolving doors. On his return, 10 minutes later, it was obvious that he was more composed. The interior of the sedan immediately took on the Saturday night odor of a bar-and-grill.

"Stanley Banks, you've been drinking."

"I think it's perfectly outrageous for you to meet the Dunstans smelling like an old whisky bottle. It's humiliating, that's what it is. What in the world's gotten into you? And Sunday morning, too."

"What's Sunday morning got to do with it?" asked Mr. Banks, hoping to divert the argument. But Mrs. Banks was still being difficult when they turned in at the Dunstan's entrance.

Taking Inventory

FOR a split second the two families stared at one another in the Dunstan entrance hall. During that instant Mrs. Banks took inventory of Mrs. Dunstan from hair-do to shoes. Mrs. Dunstan did the same for Mrs. Banks. Then, finding everything mutually satisfactory, they approached one another with outstretched arms, embraced and said, "My dear."

"I can't tell you how crazy we are about your Kay," said Mrs. Dunstan.

"Well, that's just the way we feel about Buckley," said Mrs. Banks.

"Yes indeed," said Mr. Banks. Obviously something was called for.

As far as he was concerned that seemed about all there was to be said. He would have been quite ready to second a motion to adjourn.

The situation was saved by the appearance of a maid with a shaker full of martinis and a tray of hot hors d'oeuvres. Mr. Banks looked at this arrangement with pleased incredulity.

He took a martini and found it excellent. "I think we should drink to the bride and groom," said Mr. Dunstan. Mr. Banks drank deeply and relaxed like a deflating balloon. Mr. Dunstan refilled the glasses.

Warmed by this unexpected hospitality and his previous wash-up at the hotel, Mr. Banks felt impelled to words. "This is an important occasion," he said. "My wife and I have been looking forward to it for a long time. Personally I thought your son was a great fellow the moment I set eyes on him. Now that I've met his father and mother I like him even better. From here in I foresee that the Dunstan-Banks families will beat as one."

"I am sure we're going to be most congenial," said Mrs. Dunstan apprehensively, "and do call us Doris and Herbert, not Mr. and Mrs. Dunstan."

"And Stanley and Ellie," said Mrs. Banks somewhat overeagerly.

There was an embarrassed silence.

"I love your house, Doris," said Mrs. Banks, who had by this time sized up and appraised critically every article of furniture in the living room.

"Thank you, Ellie. We like it. I'm crazy to see yours. Buckley's always talking about it."

"Another, Stan?" asked Mr. Dunstan.

"Well, just to help you out, Herb," said Mr. Banks.

His wife moved over beside him. "You'd better watch your step," she muttered.

It was too late. The release from supertension was more than he could combat. He graciously helped his friend Herb finish up the shaker.

"I think dinner is ready," said Mrs. Dunstan, who had known it for a long time.

She led the way toward the dining room. "Won't you sit there, Ellie. And now we want to hear all about our new daughter."

"I'm afraid there isn't much to tell," said Mrs. Banks.

"Nonsense," said Mr. Banks. "Would you like to hear the story about how Ellie left Kay in her baby carriage outside the A. & P. and then forgot about her and went home?"

He told them in hilarious detail. A flood of memories and anecdotes poured from him like a mountain brook. He took them through Kay's childhood and school days step by step. Then, as a kind of appendix, he gave them a detailed account of his own boyhood, early manhood and married life.

After dinner Mr. Banks picked out a comfortable-looking chair in the darkest corner of the living room. He felt suddenly drowsy. "Now," he said, "you must tell us all about Buckley." The desire to take just 40 winks became overpowering. As Buckley entered his first year in high school Mr. Banks' eyes closed and he was instantly asleep.

No Finer Family

THEY drove back to Fairview Manor late in the afternoon, Mrs. Banks at the controls. Mr. Banks felt relaxed and happy. It was hard for him to understand why he had dreaded this meeting so much. He sought in vain among his acquaintances for a finer family than the Dunstans. Certainly no one could have been easier to talk to. He hummed a contented little song. Mrs. Banks said nothing.

He graciously helped his friend Herb finish up the shaker

Husband's Duty in Child Care Is Variable

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

IT IS amazing and amusing to have a wife spring to the defense of husbands in general—husbands who have previously been assailed for not doing their share in caring for the children.

Mrs. N. B. admits to being old-fashioned in her viewpoint in that she was brought up to believe that it is a mother's duty to look after the children, day and night—unless she is ill—and the father's to earn the living.

"I think a man needs his rest at night," she writes, "because he can't take a nap in the afternoon or take it easy at his job, as a woman can do if she wishes.

"I know my husband is often too tired to fuss over a child, after work, and it doesn't mean he is neglectful of his duties as a father.

"I nursed my baby for 9½ months and I had all sorts of trouble, as he had an allergy. He had to be watched constantly as he scratched himself, even with mitts on. He was always worse at night.

"However, my husband never got up once with him and I didn't expect it.

"I feel that with a little less complaining from the wife he would appreciate her more and thus become a better husband and father. Does this make sense?"

This is a splendid philosophy. Every wise wife has to make some compromise between the ideal and the real, and it's well to bolster it with good arguments.

But many a father cannot get home fast enough to do for the baby, and calls it fun and relaxation.

In your case, perhaps the father has compensated for his failure to do night duty by assuming some of the care of the baby in daytime. Most mothers would settle for that.

Woman's Week

It's Time for Slimming—Try the Kain-Thayer Way, Add Bicycling, Swimming

KNOCKING at the door this week will be your opportunity to look like a million dollars come fall.

Ida Jean Kain's new Summer Diet Series starts in The Washington Post today, and she can tell you how to become svelte instead of sweltering in the Good Ole Summertime. You'll feel lots better and cooler if you follow her low-calorie menus; look lots better, too, in a few short weeks.

So convinced of this fact is Washington Post Columnist Mary Van Ransselear Thayer that, as of today, she is turning bravely away from lobster thermidor, petit fours, and rich little hors d'oeuvres and going on the Kain standard. She'll give you a day-by-day report on her experiment—and the results—in her columns beginning tomorrow.

She'll also bring you interviews with several prominent Washingtonians whose beautifully refashioned figures are drawing admiring comments around town these days. One of them has tossed away 36 pounds recently along the reducing route.

Bicycle for Fun and Figure

IF HIPS and thighs are your particular overweight problem, you can give your Ida Jean Kain diet a boost by meandering down to the Bicycle Center at East Potomac Park.

Besides being the only traffic-free bicycle path in the city, the ride around Haines Point and the Tidal Basin has the extra advantage of having a breeze if there is a breeze anywhere in Washington.

Mrs. Housewife can take the children along, too. The Center has small-scale bicycles for the 6-year-old and up while the tiny, tiny tots can ride in the "baby buggies" fastened to mother's bike.

If you want to take along your own picnic lunch, you'll find plenty of shaded areas for cool, restful eating. On the other hand, if it's going to be a real day out from housework you'll find snack shops along the 4½-mile ride.

The bike rental is 35 cents per hour, the time it usually takes to ride around the Point. Or bikes can be rented for 3 hours for $1. The Bureau of Engraving streetcar will take you within a 5-minute walk of the Center, and there is parking space if you have your car.

Dunking at the Wardman Park

THE present fad for sunback dresses has dubbed white shoulders not only anemic-looking but passe. A pleasant way to remedy your "whiteness," while providing fun for the youngsters is to spend some time at the Wardman Park swimming pool.

Right in the heart of Washington (an L2 or L4 bus stops practically at the doorstep of the Wardman Park Hotel), the swimming pool opens at 10 a. m. and closes at 8:30 p. m. and your $1 ticket entitles you to stay the entire day. Since the Wardman Park is an outdoor pool and very popular, Saturdays and Sundays are the "overcrowded" days of the week.

While you are soaking up some of "Old Sol" forget Junior for a while and enter him in the children's swimming classes. Private classes or individual lessons in swimming can be arranged with the pool officials.

If Wednesday happens to be the day you choose to sun and swim, you'll have the Johnny Bradford Television Show thrown in for good measure. For on that midweek-day afternoon, the NBC star televises a portion of the Television Journal right on the Wardman Park swimming pool premises.

Diets Follow Market Trends

IDA JEAN'S menus this week, we note, include both cantaloupe and cottage cheese. This is eminently appropriate since the Department of Agriculture has named them the outstanding "plentiful foods of the week." They're the sort of light, satisfying fare that will help you slip like a sylph into those lovely fall clothes described by Peggy Preston in her stories from New York last week.

A few tips on selecting cantaloupes won't be amiss:

"The eyes have it when it comes to picking out a good melon," say the experts, especially since it's bad manners to punch and pound the fruit on the grocer's counter. Take a look at the stem scar on the cantaloupe. If it was fully mature when pulled from the vine, the melon separated readily and cleanly from its stem. If the scar is sunken, smooth and well-calloused—instead of showing a cut or gouge—you can be sure it was ripe for the picking.

Note the color, too. The dark-green ground color of the rind should be developed to a lighter shade. It may have either a grayish or yellowish tinge.

The netting or veining on the surface also indicates its ripeness. It should be coarse, corky, of grayish color and stand out in a pretty bold sort of manner.

Avoid the overmature cantaloupe, generally indicated by a very pronounced yellowing of the rind that shows through the netting. And unless you just like to be disappointed, stay away from cantaloupes that look bruised, flabby, or shriveled.

Eat to Beat The Heat... And Take Off Pounds

Start Today on Ida Jean Kain's 10-Day Diet

By Ida Jean Kain

SUMMER SLIMMING is a natural . . . so stop adding more sugar to the iced tea, and I'll pass along the pattern of eating that is both cooling and reducing.

Calories and fuel are the same thing. In fact, the fuel value of foods is measured in terms of calories. And, summer or winter, these little heat units must either be burned for energy or stored—under the chin and amidships, largely on the waist.

You know only too well that some foods are higher in calories than others. Well, those same foods are more heating, too. Perhaps you prefer cold foods in hot weather and feel they are less "heating," but they can contain every bit as much fuel.

IDA JEAN KAIN

Besides, on cold fare you get the notion you're eating next to nothing. You may have salad, with dressing; bread, with butter; berries, with cream, and iced tea with lemon, and sugar. The trimmings have added a full measure of calories.

Normal weights can take the trimmings. Active summer sports may even increase the number of calories required to maintain weight. It's easy to figure that reading a book in a cozy apartment in winter, doesn't use as many calories as sailing a boat in summer. The active normal weights can go happily along with nary a calorie care.

But you're overweight—and optimistically hoping to lose 10 pounds. Shift to light summer fare and you can. Here's how to go about it . . .

Fat counts 2¼ times more . . . but there's no need to go scientific in summer. It's simply this: butter and all fats are the high fuel foods—so they make you hotter and fatter. You may think of sugar and starch as being "frightfully fattening," but they are not in it with butter, margarine, cream sauces, mayonnaise, French dressing, cream, ice cream, and so on. You can get the knack of trimming the fat—and be slimmer and cooler.

Try summer menus that really are low in fuel, and you'll lose. One summer can make you slimmer . . . a lot slimmer if you follow through on the new food habits.

Start today . . . or, do your marketing for the summer diet foods today, and start tomorrow.

THESE TUMMY-BUMPERS are members of The Washington Post Circulation Department. Today they go on Ida Jean Kain's 10-day diet to see what miracles she can perform on their behalf. Austin M. Male Dieters Say Slimming Is O. K.–But Miss Their Beer

Ah, for a glass of beer!

Today Austin M. Coleman and George Manning on the Ida Jean Kain 10-day diet, and already they are thirsting for a cold glass of beer.

But they are firm in their purpose and expect to remain steadfast to the end—of the 10 days. Both men are circulation branch managers of The Washington Post and have long hours and arduous jobs. Fortunately, the diet offers more than a lettuce leaf and a carrot stick or they'd never make it.

Manning, who carries 217 pounds on his 5-foot 8½-inch frame, never eats sweets anyway, and he likes salads, so he's not too worried. If he can just keep his mind off the beer.

His wife won't keep him company on the diet because she's slim. Manning says rather wistfully that he thinks she likes him the way he is. But she says diet diet strikes her as a fine idea, so what can a man do?

The hot weather was the chief inducement. It wasn't a question of slimming down to fit into his clothes. "All my clothes fit me; I've got one suit," he insists. His wife, who has the privilege of keeping his suits out of the moths' way, knows better, and wonders how much it'll cost to get the suits altered if he does lose weight.

Coleman is also bothered by this optimistic thought. He, too, expects to lose enough weight to make his clothes too big. "Just pull in your belt," counsel his friends.

Mrs. Coleman, who wants to lose a few pounds, too, will keep her husband company. They both remember with some glee that when they were married five years ago, Mr. Coleman—who was then 19—weighed only 130 pounds and worried because his ribs showed.

Now he distributes 227 pounds along his 5-foot 10-inch skeleton. Besides beer, he's afraid his love for mashed potatoes—with butter, of course—may be his downfall. But with the eyes of Washington upon him, ready to scold him if he backslides, he may stick it out.

(Progress reports on Messrs. Manning and Coleman will be printed here in a few days.)

Fit of Shoes Must Be Right For Toddlers

THE DAY of baby's first steps is a great day in any household. Family magazines and picture calendars have handled this event so long that most of us could set the scene from memory. The little toddler, with arms outstretched, makes his uncertain way toward mother.

So often that pretty picture is the beginning of a sad story! Medical science tells us there is a close relationship between sound general health and the condition of our feet.

When baby begins to walk, his feet are at a sort of crisis stage in their development. He needs shoes that will help him keep his balance, give him the utmost protection, and yet do nothing to crowd his toes or cramp foot muscles.

At this stage give the child shoes high enough for ankle support. The counter should be flexible, but snug enough to hold the heel in shape. The uppers should be of the softest leather, giving the toes plenty of room to spread and wiggle. The soles must be of leather thick enough for adequate protection, but extremely flexible to insure free movement.

Would you want cotton and linen to be sold to you by the same name, just because both contain cellulose? Of course not!

Yet for no better reason, two other cellulosic fibers are now sold to you as one and the same thing—rayon. They are less alike than cotton and linen. They don't behave the same way in washing or ironing. They don't have the same strength or wrinkle resistance. They are about as unlike as any two textile fibers you could name in most other qualities you look for in fabrics and garments.

To avoid confusion, urge your retailer to identify these two fibers for you—to call only one of them rayon, and the other estron—as recommended by the American Society for Testing Materials.

If you would like a free picture book that shows you in photographs of actual tests the differences between these two man-made fibers, just pencil your name and address on this ad and return it to us.

You will find the booklet—"The Tag that Tells the Consumer–WHAT?"—a help in buying fabrics and clothing.

Keep Fresh Corn Fresh!

If you want corn to taste its freshest, don't husk it until you are ready to cook it, and store it in the refrigerator after buying or picking it until the moment it is to be prepared. If any corn is left over, cut the kernels from the cobs and use in corn fritters. Serve them with maple syrup as an accompaniment to fried chicken or baked ham. Or use the leftover corn (again cut from the cobs) in a vegetable soup.

Ask Anne
About Capital Bean Soup

Can you give me a recipe for the bean soup which is a specialty at the dining rooms at the Capitol? I. R.

Here is the recipe for this famous dish, provided by W. A. Brockwell, manager of the House of Representatives restaurants:

BEAN SOUP

2 pounds white Michigan beans.
1 ham hock
Water
Salt and pepper.

Soak beans overnight in water. In the morning, drain and recover beans with water. Add ham hock and simmer slowly, for about four hours or until beans are cooked tender. Add salt and pepper to taste. Just before serving, bruise beans with large spoon or ladle enough to cloud soup. This recipe will serve about six persons.

Mr. Brockwell says that, according to tradition, the Hon. Joseph Cannon is responsible for the fact that bean soup is on the House menu every day. "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Illinois Republican who was Speaker of the House from 1903 to 1911, called the restaurant one day and complained bitterly because there was no bean soup on the menu. He said he wanted it to appear there every day, and so it has from that day to this until it has become a Capitol Hill tradition.

This is to augment and, in some cases, correct M. L.'s answer to the questions of a reader (N. H.) on Japan. I say "correct" because M. L. was an employe there and I assume N. H. is going as a dependent. Replies are numbered according to original questions.

(3) All Army transports have libraries with some children's books, but to my knowledge, no toys beyond musical instruments for children with musical talent are available. (4) Regarding bedding, dependents are not issued G. I. blankets. On the contrary, they are issued, soft, comfortable blankets, and it is not necessary to take your own. An exception would be your electric blanket, if you have one, as these work on Japanese current. (6) Washing machines, vacuum cleaners, refrigerators, etc., are now standard issue through the quartermaster in Tokyo, Yokohama, and, I believe, most occupational areas of Japan. I would advise only taking the normal complement of household ware which contributes to nice living in the States. Noritake, or similar china, will be issued, obviating packing and possible breakage of your good china. However, I would certainly take my "party" cocktail glasses, sterling, silver plate, etc. Kitchen utensils issued are adequate, unless you take a particular carving knife, pressure cooker, etc. (7) If, without crowding your cabin luggage, you can accommodate a particular musical instrument, one to which your musical children may be accustomed would be nice to have aboard ship as musical programs are part of shipboard life. Instruments such as drums, piano, a horn or two are generally standard equipment with the Special Service officer. (8) Re shoes: M. L. was handicapped by working in Japan and undoubtedly couldn't get to the PX until the better selection of new shoe shipments had been sold. You will be able, assuming you are not working, to "open the PX" in the mornings and unless you have a very difficult foot to fit, I would advise your purchasing them as needed in Japan to profit by savings. They carry good-looking play shoes, dress and evening shoes. Frankly, the only secret is to be on hand at opening hours.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Minister's Son, 23, On Sufferance in Church School After Being Expelled From University For Riotous Living, Calls Urgently for Help

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 23, the son of a minister, and before I went into the Army I was always pretty much of a "good boy." But when I found that my division was to go overseas I started to drink heavily and I have been doing it ever since.

Last year I was expelled from a very good university for doing things that are contrary to the ideals my father has tried to teach me all my life; and now I am a student at a small church college, where I was accepted due to his influence alone.

All my intelligence tests have been in the high percentiles, but I have continually degraded both my own and my family's reputation by what other people call "riotous living." I spend every cent that I can beg, borrow or steal on extravagant dissipation, with little or no thought for my parents or friends.

Feels Ashamed But Can't Stop

AT TIMES I feel ashamed of all this, but not to the extent that I will attempt to stop it. Being expelled from my first college doesn't seem to have had any effect on me; and unless you can do something to help me, I am afraid that my present way of life will continue until I die.

I realize my problem but I can't seem to do anything about it. However, my associates seem to think I can help myself. They don't try to understand me. They either hate or ignore me and are no help at all. Am I wrong in assuming that they should try, at least, to do something for me? I sincerely hope that you can advise me on the problem. E. B.

Result of Anxiously Restricted Rearing

DEAR E. B.: Case of "man overboard" in heavy seas, not knowing how he got there or how to make shore. Psychologically you are demoralized—"cast into disorder." And your dissipation amounts figuratively to clutching at chimeras for support.

If onlookers scornfully indicate that you ought to be able to help yourself—to calm the tempest and walk on the waters,—then they are a smugly self-righteous species, whose flinty unconcern gives the measure of their ignorance of factors which contribute to alcoholism.

As I see the problem, it consists of three parts—(1) blind neurotic conflict between inhibited desires and perfectionist teachings, which (2) makes your character limply irresolute, and (3) now is capped by "escapist" alcoholic addiction.

Altogether, you are involved in a vicious circle of handicapping social attitudes, which—with all due respect to your father,—are doubtless the unfortunate result of anxiously restrictive rearing, which kept you as ignorant of life and the complexities of human nature as any infant, also as docile as an infant to your parents' dictums, up to the time you left home.

Needs Deep Help to Organize Self

I SHOULD surmise: (1) That during the test years of adolescence, i. e., in high school and in the Army after being drafted, you lacked the inner certitude, based on liberal instruction and digested observation, to stand on your own feet as a sagacious assured exponent of self-controlled behavior. (2) Also, that you suffered increasing mortification in this time—of insecurity and inferiority feelings in relation to boys and girls you admired.

I daresay you yearned to be popular; wanted to be liked and respected by the younger set; what lad doesn't? But somehow you couldn't make the grade; you didn't speak their language well enough even to interest them in discussing points of difference. Thus finally, when it was time to put an ocean between your family and yourself, you took to drink—partly in daring despairing readiness to sample a "forbidden" way of life, and maybe also as medicine for brooding.

After that you were on the skids. You became an addict straight off, as many do, who first drink for comparable reasons. However, at 23, with the will to learn, you can pull out of it, with right help, I'm sure. It's infantile to try to cadge sympathy from acquaintances; you need expert intensive therapy supplied by a specialist who combines native moral sense and generosity with psychiatric penetration. He's to serve as wilderness guide, not to carry you piggyback, understand—so find the man, and good luck to you. M. H.

One on the Aisle—

A Familiar Name In 'Going Native'

By Richard L. Coe

PEOPLE: The sentimental strain in theater people is one of their most endearing qualities and often what comes from the heart also has the beam of logic . . . Such are two qualities evident in the Capitol's annual "Going Native" revue, which will be holding its auditions tonight through Wednesday at the Shoreham . . . This summer's edition, the first since his death, will be called Gene Ford's "Going Native" and one of the three producers will be Kay Ford, widow of the F st. showman, once a Ziegfeld girl and no slouch at the entertainment game herself—viz her protege, Kay DeWitt . . . Carter Barron, who thought up the all-local talent revue 16 years ago and set Gene to work on it, and Joel Margolis, Gene's successor at the Capitol, will share their production chores with Kay . . . I'm told that those who've applied for auditions have heard, or will near shortly, about same, and that the show is set for F st. the week of August 25.

BUSTER KEATON bids fair to pull out the hordes of us who laughed at his screen comedies when our hearts were young and gay . . . Buster's role of Elmer, the greeting-card salesman who finds he can predict horse races, seems right up his alley for "Three Men on a Horse," opening at Meridian Hill Park tonight . . . The Kansas boy who knocked about vaudeville as a baby with "The Three Keatons" should make a swell Elmer.

MRS. SPENCER TRACY will speak at Catholic University Wednesday evening on the John Tracy Clinic for parents of deaf children . . . John Tracy, son of the popular actor and Louise Treadwell, was born deaf and Mrs. Tracy's interest in the problems of providing the best educational facilities for her son laid out the foundation for this clinic . . . John is now 24, studying art at the Los Angeles Art School, and hobbying with such sports as tennis, swimming and polo . . . Mrs. Tracy will speak at the university at 7:30.

TED LUCE may sound like a member of a publishing family, but leap not to conclusions even though he's a co-author of "Up to Now," the new musical revue starring the Hartmans tomorrow night at Olney . . . Ted is the Hartmans' son, contributed some of the sketches to their "Angel in the Wings," which had a similar citronella tryout two summers ago . . . Ted also will be in the show, but he likes using that Luce name just to prove he can get along in the show world without his parents' name.

BOB PORTERFIELD will, Deo Volente, be welcoming back to the Barter Theater fold some of the Elsinore "Hamlet" company today . . . After Denmark, the Barter Players were shepherded by Producer Blevins Davis to our Army posts in Germany, of which more later in detail . . . Porterfield's Virginia company No. 1 will be at the Community Center, Middleburg, tomorrow night with "You Can't Take It With You."—

DONALD BUKA, taking time off from a radio series, is working for ANTA and the University of Virginia this week when he'll be playing Molnar's "Liliom" at Charlottesville . . . Buka, who went to Carnegie Tech's fine drama school, then to the Lunts, Helen Hayes and Maurice Evans, has a nutshell of advice for the young person who wants to act: "The one person I don't understand is someone who pretends to want to be an actor and then either doesn't have, or won't use, the intiative to do anything about it."

"ANNA LUCASTA" certainly is a girl who gets around, though it will have taken her until next Friday night—five years—to reach Washington . . . This play by Philip Yordan originally concerned a Pennsylvania Polish family. . . . Then he was presented with an all-Negro cast and appropriate if minor changes by Harry Wagstaff Gribble and John Wildberg at a small New York theater, where its quick success prompted removal downtown; some members of the company which will present it at the Howard for the week beginning Friday night were in that production of five years ago. . . . And they've been in its travels ever since . . . It's being used as a summer vehicle by the movies' Lizabeth Scott and soon we'll be seeing Paulette Goddard playing Anna on the screen . . . Yordan, by the way, is the chap who wrote the screen play for the Palace's current film, "House of Strangers."

New Check Announced on Cancer Care

Los Angeles, July 17 (AP).—The University of California announced today two of its medical researchers have developed a quick method for determining the effectiveness of cancer treatment.

A statement said the technique will "(1) serve as a faithful progress report for cancer patients, and (2) will evaluate new cancer treatments within 24 hours."

"As a research tool the procedure will speed up research in cancer treatment by cutting down the evaluation time from the several years required by present clinical evaluation methods to a day or two.

Change Detected Swiftly

"As a check on the progress of individual cancer patients it has become a standard procedure at the Birmingham (Veterans Administration) Hospital. Any change in the patient's condition, whether accelerated spread of malignancy or sudden development of resistance, is promptly detected by the method."

The university said the technique, which involves charting the ratio of the amount of two enzyme inhibitors found in the blood, was developed by Dr. P. M. West and Jessamine Hilliard of the university's Los Angeles medical school in cooperation with the Birmingham hospital.

"Previously the only method of determining the effectiveness of the treatment was how long the patient lived after the treatment," said the statement. "Frequently malignancy, which had been thought successfully overcome by radiation treatment or surgery, cropped out again in the patient and got out of control before the patient was aware of it.

May Save Many Lives

"This new check may enable doctors to save many such victims by catching the malignancy when it first crops opt again, enabling them to cope with it before it gets out of control."

The university said Dr. West's blood test for cancer differs from that recently announced by Dr. Charles Huggins of the University of Chicago in the following manner: "Dr. Huggins' test spots cancer in its early stages; Dr. West's test measures the growth or decline of cancer in patients who have already contracted it."

The new method involves taking blood from the patient and then the serum, the water-like portion that remains after coagulation is chemically treated to ascertain the concentration of enzyme inhibitors.

The Lyons Den By Leonard Lyons

HAROLD KENNEDY, the producer-playwright-actor who operates the Princeton Playhouse, signed Joan Blondell to appear there in the Anita Loos play, "Happy Birthday." Miss Blondell had played the show a week before at Ivoryton and her husband, Michael Todd, liked it so much that he plans to bring it to New York.

LELAND HAYWARD, the producer, now honeymooning in Italy, was asked "why did you ever decide to follow that crew-haircut fad?" Mr. Hayward, who has had his crew-cut for 20 years, replied: "I didn't follow that fad. I AM the fad" spondent who lost his life at the . . . Kenneth Miller, son of the late Webb Miller, the correspondent who lost his life at the beginning of the war, has become a newspaperman and is working for the U. P. in Boston . . . A Hollywood actress who was beaten into unconsciousness by a wealthy, front-page figure, received a settlement which netted her a purse second only to that which Dempsey received for his beating from Gene Tunney.

SANDRA RAMBEAU, the international glamour girl, took her pet chihuahua, "Tarzan," to El Morocco, where she had been invited to supper. Tarzan is the prize-winning dog which weighs about 8 pounds . . . At 4 a. m., Miss Rambeau's escort suggested a drive to Southampton, and champagne-and-sandwich snack at the beach. The glamour girl agreed . . . As soon as the car reached the parkway, Tarzan nestled on the back of the driver's neck. After a half hour, the man suggested to Miss Rambeau that she remove the dog from his perch. "I wouldn't dream of it," Miss Rambeau replied. Then she explained that the only reason she agreed to drive to Southampton was because one of Tarzan's pleasures is to ride on the back of an auto-driver's neck . . . The driver wheeled back to New York.

CAROL MARCUS, the estranged wife of William Saroyan, fell in love with the writer at first meeting. When she wanted to go to California to see him again, her mother refused to consent unless she was properly chaperoned. The young lady then reported that she'd have a chaperon—one of her young friends . . . Mrs. Marcus asked Al Hirschfeld, the artist, about the chaperon. Hirschfeld met her, talked with her, and then assured Mrs. Marcus that although the chaperon was young, she was sophisticated enough to be aware of the responsibility and of the importance of marriage. The chaperon, Oona O'Neil, accompanied Miss Marcus to California as a chaperon, and there married Charles Chaplin.

Repetitious Play

Some parents show impatience with young children who do things over and over. Youngsters may climb to the top of a box, jump down, climb up again, jump, and do this over and over. Ball-bouncing is another common form of repetitious play. Indeed, such play is likely to come in all shapes and forms. After a dose of this, Mother or Dad are likely to say, "Why don't you do something else? That's getting on my nerves."

We need to recognize that repetitious play has a real place in the scheme of things. It leads to the learning of motor skills that are important in games and other physical activities. It helps develop the coordination that is so important in all sorts of ways. And it helps build self-confidence in the youngster who acquires these skills.

If you still find that these activities "get on your nerves" it's better to suggest to your child that he find another place to play than to try to discourage him.

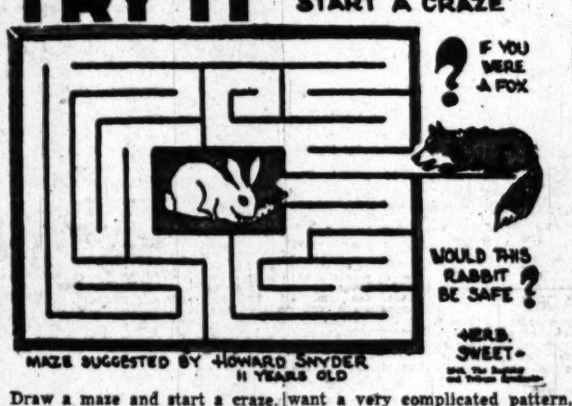
TRY IT — DRAW A MAZE START A CRAZE



MAZE SUGGESTED BY HOWARD SNYDER 11 YEARS OLD

Draw a maze and start a craze. Br'er Fox has a reputation for being a good hunter. If you are foxy enough to follow the trail into the den where Mr. Bunny is munching carrot, then you also can draw a maze of your own.

A maze is simply a puzzle trail from one point to another. You can design your own with even fewer turns and paths, or if you want a very complicated pattern, you can work one out that is 10 times as hard as this one.

Try drawing one in your school notebook and add to it by sketching lines lightly until your trail is worked out. Then draw the lines much heavier and see if your friends can follow through the maze.

What's the Verdict?

GOOD SAMARITAN

Q. A deaf farmer drove his truck onto a railway crossing without making certain no train was approaching. A train that had whistled for the crossing hit the car, despite the engineer's frantic effort to stop. The farmer was injured, entirely through his fault. The farmer wanted to be taken to a hospital 3 miles away, in the direction from which the train came. The train crew, instead, took him to a town 20 miles in the direction of its destination, and as a result he died of loss of blood. His estate sues the railroad for injuring him and for neglecting to take care of him. Is it liable?

A. The railway is not liable for the injury, since the accident was due entirely to the farmer's fault. There are different views as to whether the railroad has any duty to take care of the injured person in a case like this. But the courts agree that, once having undertaken to care for him, the railway must give him every reasonable attention. Assuming that a jury could find that the difference between a 3-mile and a 20-mile trip to the hospital was the difference between life and death, the railroad would be liable for the death. —F. L. D.

From Nine to Five

I go to work from nine to five . . . To earn my daily bread . . . And gather facts and figures that . . . I crowd into my head . . . . I hurry to get down on time . . . And when I walk in late . . . I try to make my boss believe . . . The trolley wouldn't wait . . . At noon I put my pencil down . . . And grab a bite to eat . . . And when the final whistle blows . . . I dash into the street . . . It seems a sort of useless way . . . For hours to be spent . . . But then I have to have some cash . . . For groceries and rent . . . Indeed it is the only means . . . To keep myself alive . . . And so I guess I'll go right on . . . And slave from nine to five.

BARNABY

Do you think we ought to start raising pearls today, Mr. O'Malley? It's awful hot. . .
Very best time. The secretion of nacreous matter occurs during the warm season—
But they smell funny. . .
Fine. The strongest mollusks make the biggest pearls—
What's the string for, Mr. O'Malley?
A technique I developed in the Persian Gulf many years ago, Barnaby. . . .
The pearls are formed already strung. . .

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Well, Look Who's Back At Work Again!

Vacation over, I began opening the mail that had accumulated while I was away. The first thing to greet me was E. Culbreth's poem:

Lonely whistling of a train
Leaving in the night.
Roaring motors of a plane
Starting on a flight.
Speak of far lands temptingly,
Stir my restless feet;
But I'm much too busily
Making sure I eat.

As you might suspect, I spent the entire holiday hunting for good stories. But I think the best one I heard in the whole three weeks was the one Herblock told me when I got back.

We had been discussing "human nature" when Herb recalled the story of the reporter who was assigned to interview the town's richest man.

"Get the real inside story of how he got so rich," ordered the city editor.

"Okay," nodded the reporter. At the rich man's house he was ushered into a sparsely furnished room, illuminated by a single candle.

"So you want to know how I became rich, eh?" said the old man. "Well, it's a long story, so let me pinch out this candle before I begin."

"Never mind," replied the reporter, "I think I've already got my story."

We spent most of our vacation in New England, and the "story" up that way is far from funny.

We've had a slight business recession in this area. But up there, they're faced with the threat of a real depression.

Mills and factories are curtailing production, and people aren't spending as freely as before. We came back impressed with the relative stability of Washington business conditions.

However, in the matter of handling traffic, they've got us thoroughly licked. Such high-speed arteries as the Pulaski Skyway, Hutchinson River Parkway, Merritt Parkway and Interborough Parkway get you into, through and out of New York with amazing ease.

By comparison, Washington traffic moves like Ben Franklin's sedan chair.

For example, on the return trip, we had dinner in Brooklyn, and then started for Washington.

We went over the Manhattan Bridge, crossed Manhattan, entered the Holland Tunnel, picked up the Pulaski Skyway and were miles past Newark before we were stopped by our second traffic light. (The only other light that stopped us was on Canal st., while crossing Manhattan.)

Traffic shouldn't deter you from taking your car to or through New York—but parking might. Downtown, you're almost forced to put your car in a garage, and the rates are very high. The garage in Radio City charged me $9 for three days.

By far the best food we encountered on the trip was in Boston's Union Oyster House, about two blocks from the Statler Hotel. It's worth a trip to Boston just to eat there.

We made up our itinerary as we traveled, and had no advance hotel reservations. But in spite of conventions and the Fourth of July jam we made out okay, except in Boston.

The mercury stood at 96, but the reception we got from the Ritz Carlton's room clerk kept us comfortably cool for the next three days.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

Police Chief Barrett left on his vacation the same day you did. Any significance?

Hal Feyling,

Dear Hal:

Maybe he shares my opinion of Washington's humidity.

Bill.

PERSONAL NOTES

Eunice P. James, 3304 Chauncy pl., Mount Rainier, Md.: The only thing I can figure is that the woman who suggested a spare auto key be kept under the car's hood must drive a prewar model with a hood that can be opened from the outside.

EVER SEE A HORSE FLY?

Laura V. Montgomery, the public steno at the Willard Hotel, has never seen a mushroom walk—so she's intrigued by the headline we put on a story of a recent strike. We said:

"Walkout of 350 Mushrooms."

CAN'T BLAME THEM

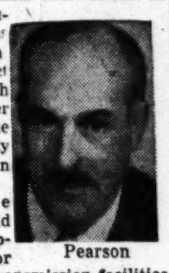
Committee Votes Power Sellout

By Drew Pearson

The private power lobby pulled skillful wires in the Senate Appropriations Committee last week and created a neat short circuit in one of Mr. Truman's famous campaign promises. The effect was to switch public power over to the private utility companies in the West.



Pearson

What the committee did was cut out appropriations for Government transmission facilities and invite the private power companies to build them instead. This would stop public power from being transmitted to the public—except through the private companies at their own higher rates.

The committee voted so secretly behind closed doors that its action was scarcely noticed by the press. Yet the effect was to sabotage the entire Truman public-power program.

The man who really threw the switch in favor of the electric companies was Senator Elmer Thomas, Oklahoma Democrat. Thomas, who has not hesitated to use his prestige as a United States Senator to influence the commodities market on which he was speculating, rallied enough Democratic votes to give the Republicans the voting majority.

The two Senators who fought hardest to save public power were Carl Hayden of Arizona and Joe O'Mahoney of Wyoming, Democrats. They were joined on most votes by Senator Dennis Chavez of New Mexico, Democrat, and Senator Milt Young of North Dakota, Republican.

Those who voted with Thomas for the big power companies were Senators Pat McCarran of Nevada and Kenneth McKellar of Tennessee, Democrats, and Chan Gurney of South Dakota, Clyde Reed of Kansas, and Guy Cordon of Oregon, Republicans.

The showdown fight will now take place in the conference between Senate and House Appropriations members. The House has already voted against the power companies and the man who is counted on to fight for the public interest is tough Congressman Mike Kirwan of Ohio, who hasn't a single power project in his district.

How the Lobby Worked

The Senate's sellout to the private power companies was the result of high-paid, high-pressure lobbying.

The Montana Power Co. was an example. John Corette, vice president of Montana Power, personally visited every member of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. While he was exerting his charm in Washington, his company back home was publishing a propaganda book called "Public Power Means High Taxes, Socialism and Less Money for Irrigation."

The Montana Chamber of Commerce even spread the lie that public power lines would rob Montana of power by transporting it to Idaho for an atomic energy plant.

Montana is a long way from Iowa, but the Montana Power Co. even influenced Representative Ben Jensen, Iowa Republican. Arising on the House floor, Jensen produced a map of Montana.

Congressman John Rooney, Brooklyn Democrat, interrupted suspiciously.

"I merely want to ask the gentleman who prepared this beautiful map?" Sweetly inquired Rooney.

"Who does the gentleman suppose made it?" snapped Jensen.

"The Montana Power Co.," promptly replied Rooney.

"Why, of course they did," blustered Jensen. "They are fighting for their lives. I am glad the gentleman asked."

So skillful did the lobbies operate that the Senate Appropriations Committee went to the unusual length of naming the individual power companies that they wanted to receive the lush bonanza of Government-financed power.

Truman blamed the GOP-controlled Eightieth Congress for obeying "the orders of the power monopoly" and refusing "to provide the money for public transmission lines." Now the Senate Appropriations Committee, controlled by Democrats, has gone a step farther. They stipulate that the transmission lines actually be built by the same "power monopoly."

PUC Sets July 28, For Gas Rate Hearing

The District Public Utilities Commission will hold a public hearing on a rate increase request by the Washington Gas Light Co. on July 28 at 10 a. m. in the District Building.

The firm filed a petition Thursday for a 7 per cent rate boost, and asked that it be made effective August 15. The company said declining earnings made the request necessary, and blamed increased labor costs as principally responsible.

Check And Double Check . . .

Says Joseph Freeman, Workrooms Manager of The Hecht Co.'s New York Ave. Service Building

"Check and double check," says Joe Freeman, "are the watchwords of our New York Ave. Service Building inspection system." That's what the men pictured above are doing . . . making certain that the things The Hecht Co. sells meet our rigid standards . . . making certain that a piece of furniture is in A-1 condition before it is delivered to a customer. As soon as a freight car is pulled up to our railroad siding . . . or a trailer truck to our receiving platform . . . a corps of inspectors go into action. Their experienced eyes and trained hands search out the important construction details. For example, on upholstered goods, they examine the tailoring of the fabric . . . the springs, padding and webbing. On solid furniture, they note the number of glue blocks . . . check drawer construction . . . veneer bonding. Detailed reports of each shipment tells us whether the goods meet the standards we require. In this way we assure our customers that the things they buy have the type of workmanship and material they want. And when you consider that approximately 5,000 units of bulk or heavy goods require inspection in an average week . . . ours is no easy job.

But, inspection does not stop with the first examination on the receiving platform. A second detailed inspection is made when a piece of merchandise is taken from the storage bin prior to delivery to a customer. It is then sent to a finishing line where it is completely gone over by our furniture finishers. This work is then inspected and checked by the shop inspector. A last inspection is made when the piece is placed in the delivery loading bin.

Experienced and careful as our corps of inspectors are, remember, they're only human and defects can slip by. The final judgment in such matters rests with the hundreds of thousands of Hecht Co. customers. If a chair, sofa, desk or any other piece of merchandise arrives at a customer's home in a condition that does not meet with full approval . . . remedial action is taken to guarantee satisfaction. "Checking and double checking are mighty important operations," says Joe Freeman, "the type of operations that help make The Hecht Co. a great place to work . . . a great place to shop."
